State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake, ss.

I, Adam Zeh, county auditor, in and for said county of Red Lake, in the state of Minnesota, do solemnly swear that the above and foregoing list of real estate taxes and penalties for the year 1898 delinquent and unpaid on the first Monday in January, 1900, in said county and state, consisting of pages numbered from 1 to 224, both inclusive, is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Signed ADAM ZEH,
County Auditor of Red Lake County, Minn.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of January, A. D. 1900.

JOSEPH PERRAULT,
Clerk of District Court,
Red Lake County, Minn.

VALUABLE BUILDINGS

Have Been Erected by Y. M. C. A.'s During the Past Year.

In these days of sharp competition when everything has to prove its right to existence and values are fixed on a cold business basis, it may be of interest to some to know what has been taking place in the building line during the last 12 months, and the outlook for the coming 12 in the Young Men's Christian association of this country. The amount and value of property by no means tell the success of the organization; they merely show the strength and permanency.

Most of the Herald's readers are familiar with the successful canvass for $50,000 at Grand Rapids, Mich., shortly after the international convention in that city in May last, largely the work of Secretary Van Vranken, and which left their $110,000 building free from debt. Other cities raising equal or larger amounts were Cincinnati, O., and Cambridge, Mass., whose building in 1897 cost $156,000. Those which cleared their property of debt under $50,000 were Rockford, Ill., Wilmington, Del., Butler, Pa., Montreal, Que., Keene, N. H., Seattle, Wash., Sharpsburg, Pa., Janesville, Wis., Tonawanda, N. Y., Yonkers, N. Y., Baraboo, Wis.

Among the cities which secured new buildings in 1899 may be mentioned Washington, D. C., where the property of the Columbia Athletic club, valued at $125,000, was purchased for $75,000. Subsequent improvements foot up a total cost of $102,000.

Memphis, Tenn., also purchased a club house for $22,500. Other cities coming into possession of club houses were Manchester, N. H., Dallas, Tex., West Side Department, Chicago, Hyde Park Department, Chicago.

Buildings were erected at Keokuk, Ia., Leavenworth, Kan., Newark, O., Salem, Mass., Bristol, R. I., Montclair, N. J., Passaic, N. J., Sacremento, Cal., Mobile, Ala., Kingston, N. Y., Waterloo, Ia., Evanston, Ill., Taunton, Mass., Warwick, N. Y., Oregon iCty, Ore.

Surprising as this record is, the present year bids fair to equal if not exceed it. Scranton, Pa., will build at a cost of $250,000, including lot; Brockton, Mass., $110,000; Springfield, O., $60,000; Jamestown, N. Y., $45,000; New Haven, Conn., $200,000; Macon, Ga., $12,000; Dayton, O., $250,000. Pittston, Pa., Springfield, Mo., Lancaster, Pa., Shamokin, Pa., Westfield, Mass., Kenosha, Wis., Chelsea, Mass., Colorado Springs, Col., Ansonia, Conn.

Such buildings as these as homes for the young men of the nation is an indication of the need and that the need is being met by the business community.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL CENSUS

The following paragraph from the Outlook of New York will interest a great many persons in Grand Forks and other persons in the northwest:

"The Philadelphia Sabbath School association proposes an interesting undertaking, namely, a complete census of Philadelphia's million and a quarter inhabitants, the entire census to be accomplished in a single day. The object of this census is to list all those in that city who attend church or Sunday school services. An advisory committee consists of one clergyman or some other official from each religious denomination. The Sabbath School association has divided Philadelphia into 18 districts and 137 sub districts. For each of these sub districts there will be a chairman, to each of whom a section will be given. These section workers will write the names and residences on cards, with such description as may be needed, and deliver the cards to the sub district chairman, who will make totals of the results, and in turn deliver the information to the district chairman. It is proposed to take the census on the 22nd of February. The pioneer of the endeavor is Mr. Hugh Cork, who has had charge of a similar census in Pittsburg. Mr. Cork says that out of the entire population of Pittsburg only 600 people refused to give the information asked. As results of that census many churches have been able, first, to bring back those who had lapsed from attendance, and, secondly, to gain others who had no particular church allegiance. The Pittsburg census revealed the fact that 25,000 persons had relinquished church attendance."

Thomas Edison used to have Nikola Tesla working for him in his studio near Paris. Tesla came to him one day asking for work, and Edison, who needed help, referred him to the foreman, named Fulton. The latter took the young foreigner on condition that he would work. This Tesla did. For three days and nights he never closed his eyes. At the end of the first fortnight he had not had 48 hours' sleep altogether, and Fulton, the foreman, made him take a rest. He also said to the young man that on account of the strain both had been under they would better have a good meal. Accordingly, the foreman and the student went to a well-known cafe in one of the boulevards and got one of the biggest and thickest steaks possible. It was enormous, and seemed to be overwhelming for two. Besides, the garnishings were liberal and there was enough good wine. Between them, however, they managed to make everything disappear, and then Fulton, turning to Tesla, asked him if there was anything else he would like. "You're out with me, you know, and whatever you want, just order it." Tesla looked vaguely around a minute, as if making up his mind, and then, hesitating, said: "Mr. Fulton, if you don't mind, I would like another steak."

MOODY.

The late evangelist Moody was a firm believer in newspaper advertising. He used to say: I don't believe any man need preach to empty pews if he will only use a little common sense. Advertise. Put a notice in the papers. Stick out a sign. Put out a bill of fare. No church can succeed with only undertakers' signs on it. Don't be afraid. Shock somebody. No matter; we've got to be shocked. Somebody says it isn't dignified. My friends, let dignity go to the winds. That isn't one of the fruits of the Spirit. I notice these reporters don't stop for dignity. When they want anything out of me, they don't hesitate to follow me right into my bedroom. Use the same enterprise in running your meetings that the papers do in their business.—Buffalo (N. Y.) Commercial.

DID NOT KNOW HIS BRAND.

And the Result Was That the Maverick Got in the Wrong Corral.

It all happened in a church not over a mile from the city post office, says the Washington Star. There was a young people's reception afoot, and there was a programme upon which appeared the name of a tenor soloist who is given to scrambled hair, sombreros and neckties that are vociferous. It was getting well along in the evening and the soloist had failed to appear. It so happened that nobody there knew him, and the lady who had engaged him had also failed to appear. Presently one of the men active in greeting the guests noticed a large, picturesque-appearing man enter the church parlor, and after looking carefully around him slide into a seat, beside which he deposited a big sombrero. It then appeared that his hair quite answered the description, also his tie, which was a screaming scarlet. The young manager approached the stranger, sure of his prey, and, bending over him, said, in his most dulcet manner: "The audience has been expressing regret at your nonappearance. Will you now favor us with one of your songs?"

The stranger looked up at the young man with rather a startled air and then blurted out: "Song! Mister, you've rounded up the wrong critter. I don't know G flat from gewhiz. I'm off the reservation, you see, and was wondering what kind of a game was on in here, and came in sociable-like. I—I reckon, mister, these folks ain't got my brand," and he fled into the outer darkness.

RED TAPE IN WASHINGTON.

So Strictly Observed the Carpenter Could Not Clean the Glass Door.

A correspondent passing hurriedly into the room of the committee on rivers and harbors to see Representative Burton pulled the knob off the door, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"How can I get that fixed, do you think?" asked Burton. "Shall I get the carpenter or the locksmith?"

"The locksmith, I suppose."

"No, sir. Were I to send for the locksmith he would tell me to consult the architect of the capitol. He has no authority to fix doorknobs. Doorknobs are permanent fixtures and are solely within the jurisdiction of the architect of the capitol."

"Do you see that bookcase there?" said Secretary Ellis. "I caused the carpenter to paste some cloth on the inside of the glass doors in order that the books might not show. He did the work, but when he had finished I noted that he had not cleaned the glass before he put the cloth on. The thing looked so disreputable that I asked him why he had not cleaned the glass.

"He told me that the glass was a permanent fixture and that he had no authority to touch it, but that the placing of the cloth upon it was a temporary matter and was entirely within the province of his labors. The whole thing's got to be done all over again."

OFFICIAL BATHTUBS.

From This Account We Learn How the Legislators Indulge in Their Ablutions.

Away down in the basement of the capitol, in the midst of the winding and mysterious passages of this subterranean section, are located the congressional bathrooms, where the statesmen cleanse their cuticles at the expense of Uncle Sam. There are about 15 tubs on the house side, and when congress is in session they are patronized at all hours of the day. The representatives who take their periodic tubbings in the capitol bathrooms are not bound by any particular hour or rule of bathing. They start in at any hour of the day (or night, if the house sits late), and are scrubbed and rubbed down by strong-armed attendants at government expense. The fact that the tubs are almost constantly occupied indicates the extent to which the privilege of a free bath is appreciated. In many of the hotels of the city patronized by congressmen a charge is made for the use of the bath, and the thrifty representative can get around this expense by making his ablutions at the capitol, says the Washington Star.

In both the senate and house wings of the capitol there are barber shops, where statesmen are shaved, and hair tonics, perfumes and soaps furnished by the government, so that if one has a mind to, the usual expenses of the barber shop can be avoided.

Color in Commerce.

The United States consul general in Frankfort says "that it is important to study the taste of people in the matter of color, as well as in regard to shape, in designing goods for a foreign market. Saxon makers of needles drove England out of Brazil by wrapping their goods in pink paper instead of black. Other Germans are catering to the fondness of Russians for red in their dress. France recently learned how distasteful green is to a Chinaman; but it cost a good deal of money to make the discovery."

Tobacco a Necessity.

One of the few things of which the Boers have an inadequate supply is tobacco. While spending millions for guns and ammunition, they neglected to provide themselves with an abundance of the soothing weed. Soldiers positively cannot get along without it. They can easier in many instances dispense with food. An editor in Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal, appreciates the situation. He has made an appeal to the citizens who remain at home to deny themselves tobacco in order that the supply of the men at the front may not be restricted.

GETTING AN ANTIQUE CHEAP.

How a Collector Secured an Old Mahogany Table at Very Small Cost.

When a man becomes a crank on the subject of antiques he will go to any extreme to gain possession of a coveted treasure, says the Philadelphia Record. There is a physician up the northeast way who has the craze, and has it bad. He made a professional call on an old Irish woman the other day, and, as her ailment was not of sufficient severity to keep her from her household duties, he found her in the kitchen washing dishes. His eyes glistened as he saw the table upon which this homely operation was being performed. It was an old decrepit affair on three legs, but it was solid mahogany, with quaint carvings.

"That's a queer sort of a table to be washing dishes on," ventured the doctor.

"Sure, it is that," replied its owner; "an' I wouldn't be bothered wid it at all, at all, if I could afford a new one."

The doctor was all solicitude in a moment. "Why, that's too bad," he said. And then, as though seized with a sudden philanthropic inspiration, he added: "If you will allow me I'll buy you a new table, and I'll take the old one off your hands." Of course, the old woman was only too delighted. The doctor invested two dollars in a common kitchen table, in exchange for which he received the old mahogany one, which had been in the old woman's family for nearly a century.

AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

This Account Says the American Pavilion Is a Beautiful and Attractive Structure.

Our cocher has been ordered to turn into the Avenue de la Tour Marbourg, and suddenly I find that we have come out upon the Quai d'Orsay, and are at the entrance of the Pont des Invalides, says the New Lippincott. Here cabby is ordered to halt, and looks on in surprise as we descend into the ankle-deep dust and proceed by means of our open sesame, to the place where four American flags at the corners of a large square indicate the inclosure chosen by our commissioner general for the American pavilion.

Here, on the rive gauche, in company with others of the Pavillons des Etrangeres, will stand the American pavilion, a beautiful and attractive structure, whose broad steps lead down to the water. Here Americans may land, and at once receive that welcome and attention which the visitor soon discovers is second nature to the commissioner general and his staff; and here, more than anywhere else in Paris, will he find himself thoroughly at home.

It is to our commissioner general and his untiring industry that we are indebted for the great amount of space which is to contain the great American exhibit, and even my gloomy guide is tempted to break into a triumphant smile at this new proof of American skill and energy.

WAS DOING SO AND SO.

Quick Retort of a Level-Headed Youngster to a Rather Pertinent Question.

Frank is a boy of less than five years, sturdy, round-headed and thick in the calves. He is always restless and ever hungry. For one so young he commands an amount of language, correctly pronounced, that is remarkable. He is a busy boy, with many queer schemes running through his head. But he shines when playing a knife and fork, for here is he truly great, says the Chicago Chronicle.

It was at a family reunion that he was asked and replied to a question of a personal nature. His retort silenced his inquisitive and would-be jocular uncle, while the remainder of the family—Frank excepted—roared with laughter. The party was too big to have all seated at the extension table, so the children—four in number—were placed at a smaller table, where they were able to do as much damage as could have happened had they been with their elders.

Frank was served badly, for he has a fine appetite, and is not bothered with bashfulness. He bore down on a drumstick with vigor and filled his fat face with the meat. He was earnest in endeavor and suspended all conversation. One of his uncles glanced at the boy as he munched, and said:

"What are you doing, Frank?"

The boy was employed on a large mouthful at the time, and, like a skillful general, he attended to the matter in mouth first. He carefully masticated the cud, swallowed with an air of satisfaction and then turning his head over his left shoulder replied as follows:

"Oh, I'm doing so and so."

He immediately resumed operations on the drumstick.

Papa Liked Rag Time.

The Boston Transcript tells a story of a man who had a class of boys in natural history. One of the subjects which he took up was butterflies and moths, and he told the children a good deal about the chrysalides and cocoons. After he had got the boys well instructed he showed one of the smallest of them one of the cocoons, and asked: "What butterfly is this the cocoon of?" Then the little boy looked up and said, slowly and respectfully: "My papa says that all cocoons look alike to him!"

The Holy City.

Jerusalem is now holding but a shadow of the magnificent city of ancient times. It is about three miles in circumference and is situated on a rocky mountain.

Asparagus is so plentiful on the Russian steppes that the cattle eat it like grass. The seeds are sometimes dried and used as a substitute for coffee.

PART OF WRECKED SHIP.

How a Firm of English Shipbuilders Are Utilizing Half of a Stranded Vessel.

Probably the most remarkable achievement in the line of wrecking and rebuilding to be found in maritime history is represented by the reconstructed steamer Milwaukee, which was turned out in the summer of 1899 at the yard of C. S. Swan & Hunter at Wallsend-on-Tyne, England, says the Engineering Magazine.

The Milwaukee, a vessel of 493 feet length and 56-foot beam, went ashore near Aberdeen in September, 1898, a huge rock penetrating the hold for a length of 80 feet and to a height of eight feet above the tank top. When the salvage operators saw that it would be impossible to save the entire vessel it was decided to blow her in two with dynamite. This was done successfully and 180 feet of the fore end was left on the rocks, while the after end was towed to a dry dock.

The saved portion of the vessel depended for flotation until placed in dry dock upon a transverse watertight bulkhead at the forward end of the boiler space. It was towed to the Tyne and moored in the river until a new bow was built, launched and made ready for connection with it. So well was this done that a person ignorant of the facts would never know that he was looking at the original bow, while even those persons who knew the circumstances of the case were unable to point out the point where the junction of the new and old portions was made.

FROST SPOILED THE SPORT.

Sad Misfortune That Befell a Party of Georgia Chicken Fighters on a Stranded Steamboat.

Forty dejected and homesick gamblers returned to Knoxville the other day, says the Savannah News. On Christmas day, with 100 gamecocks, they left on a steamboat for an isolated resort down the river, where they expected to have a great cocking main and return to the city the next morning. The steamer carried no lifeboats. Before the destination was reached the steamer went on a sandbar and stuck fast "ten miles from nowhere." The weather was very cold and ice formed about the craft. The sports, determined to make the best they could of the situation, improvised a pit on the deck and held a few fights. As the hours went by and the night grew colder and the ice in the river thicker, there came no hope of getting the boat off or of being rescued. Then someone became hungry, and it was ascertained that the sandwiches had given out. There was nothing to eat on board! For some hours longer the sports put on a brave front, but finally hunger got the best of them and they put their gamecocks—valued at five to one hundred dollars each—to slaughter. For two days and two nights they hung up on the sandbar, eating chicken that fairly tasted of money.

ARMY RULES ENDANGER LIFE.

Standing Up Under Fire Not the Only Absurd Regulation in the British Army.

The "unwritten law" in the British army which forbids officers from seeking shelter when under fire is not the most absurd regulation of the service. There are other "unwritten laws" which are just as Quixotic, and which lead to just as great mortality among the men who are most valuable to the service. One of them is illustrated by a little known circumstance with regard to the famous "charge of the light brigade" at Balaklava.

It is a rule, no less stringent because inofficial, in the British cavalry that when riding to attack only a certain rate of progress is permissible. The regular formation must be kept up, even though greater speed would minimize the chances of loss of life. When the Seventeenth and Thirteenth hussars were nearing the Russian artillery at Balaklava in face of a fire which caused men to fall every moment Capt. White, who was in the second line, spurred his horse with the idea of reaching the enemy as quickly as possible. This brought him to a level with Lord Cardigan, who was in the first line. Lord Cardigan, although he believed that certain destruction awaited the whole brigade, laid his sword across Capt. White's breast, peremptorily forbidding him to ride any faster than the others. White apologized and obeyed, checking his horse at once. Had the hussars been allowed to ride at full speed it is probable that the casualties among them in the course of the charge would have been decreased by 80 per cent.

Birds and Beasts at War.

You would hardly believe that moles, clumsy and almost blind, become perfect demons when they quarrel. No one knows what they quarrel about, but if they once start fighting one has to die. They will keep on in the presence of any number of spectators, hanging on to one another like bulldogs and burying their enormously strong jaws and teeth in one another's flesh. Hedgehogs, another type of the quiet, inoffensive-looking animal, not only fight, but always to the death, and when one is killed the other generally devours him. Hares, on the other hand, are proverbially the most timid of creatures, yet they can fight. A fight between two hares is a ludicrous sight, as they skip and jump over one another. But a blow from the hind legs of a hare is no joke to his opponent. Among birds robins are the most pugnacious. More than one case could be quoted of two robins so frantically set on killing one another as to have allowed themselves to be picked up in the hands of a looker-on and there have laid with beak and claws deeply buried in one another's plumage.

A QUEER CORK SAFE.

Dupes Were Unable to Find the Place Where They Were Bunkoed.

"Did you ever hear of a cork safe?" asked a drummer who represents the latest thing in chilled-steel and burglar-baffling time locks, according to the New Orleans Times-Democrat. "As far as I am aware," he continued, when everybody chorused a negative, "only one of them was ever built. It was made by an ingenious Dutch mechanic for a one-time famous confidence man named Dr. Baggs, who operated in Denver, Salt Lake and 'Frisco. The safe was a folding affair, made of paper on a backing of sheet cork and when it was opened up was six feet high, and looked exactly like the real thing. As it was always placed in a corner, it had only two sides, but every visible detail was complete—combination knob, hinges, lettering, bolt-heads and all. When folded it could be carried in an ordinary dress suit case. Baggs used the thing in a fake lottery office which was of itself a marvel of trick furnishing.

"When the victim entered the place it looked like an ordinary business establishment, with desks, railing, maps on the walls, safe in the corner, and several clerks at work on books. The instant he left a roll-top desk was opened up into a bed. The railing was folded together and slipped into a closet, a table was turned into a wash stand, a cabinet turned into a bureau, the safe was put away in its case, the curtains were pulled down and the room was to all appearances a simple sleeping apartment. By that means the poor dupe was never able to find the place where he had been bunkoed. I saw Baggs' old cork safe when I was last in San Francisco. It is now owned by a cigar dealer, who bought it as a curio, and while it is pretty badly battered, one can still see plainly that it was a wonderful piece of mechanical work."

THE JOLLY HARBOR SEALS.

One of Them Up on the Platform of Their Pool, Watching the The Red Fir.

"What's he watching the clock for?" a visitor at the aquarium asked of an attendant, referring to the smallest of the three harbor seals there, the one with the blackest coat. It was up on the platform at the end of the pool, with its eyes apparently fixed on the clock that is secured to the front of the railing round the gallery. The hour was about two minutes of four o'clock, says the New York Sun.

"He's waiting for the whistle to blow," was the reply, and it certainly did seem as though the little black seal was watching for something.

The seals all know well the sound of the four-o'clock whistle, for that means their feeding time has come. The whistle is the signal of the closing hour of the aquarium, and the seals are fed immediately.

As the people set their faces toward the door the seals dash and slash and prance about in their pool, and jump up half or three-quarters of their length out of the water and look over the railing, watching and waiting for the man with the food. As he walks along the pool toward the platform at the end the seals rush on the platform to meet him.

It may be that the little black fellow just happened to be up there at that hour, and that it was looking at the clock just by chance, and that it couldn't tell the time by it at all; but the seals all know sure enough the four-o'clock whistle.

A KNOTTY CASE.

In Which It Is Shown That Cows Are Valued More Than a Mere Human Body in Africa.

A Uganda woman had married three husbands at different times, and had had a son by one of them—the second, says a writer in Blackwood. The father unfortunately died, and the other two quarreled about the possession of the son, who meanwhile lived with his mother. As soon as he was old enough to take law into his own hands the boy elected to live with the first husband, and left his mother to do so; thereupon the third husband raided the first, carrying off ten head of cattle, and, as if to still further complicate the case, one of the cows calved on the road. It now fell to my lot to decide with whom the boy was to live, and what was to become of the cattle.

So much evidence was produced that I became utterly confused, especially when the mother crawled in on hands and knees to give evidence as to parentage, in which, by the way, she was flatly contradicted by her offspring. I finally decided that the boy was to live with the first husband, and that half of the cows were to be returned to him, the remaining half, with the calf, being kept by No. 3. At this decision No. 1 was delighted, but I could never make out why, as five cows, even without a calf, are usually valued far above any mere human body in Africa.

Bursts Into More Pieces.

The ordinary shell which was manufactured 30 years ago only broke into from 20 to 25 pieces when it burst. At the present time it bursts into 240, while a shrapnel shell, which only used to scatter 37 missiles, now scatters 340. A present-day bomb, when charged with peroxylene, breaks up into 1,200 pieces, and it is estimated that it would effectively kill anyone standing within 220 yards of the explosion.

Jackies Fond of Ball.

Whenever enough men from an American man-of-war can get shore leave, no matter in what foreign port they may be lying, they are almost certain to start a ball game. In the English navy cricket is even played on board ship.

KING POTT OF AFRICA.

A Boer Leader Who Occupies an Exalted Position in the Transvaal.

The town of Lourenco Marques for some time past has been chosen as the head center of the Transvaal secret service. The spies and informers of that notorious gang, says the Cape Times, come and go with all the liberty, swagger and self-assurance, as if they were in the suburbs of Pretoria. Delagoa bay is a so-called neutral port, with a daily train and postal service direct to Pretoria and Johannesburg. There is also a telegraph service, which apparently is at the command of Mr. Pott, the Transvaal consul general and consul for the Netherlands and Free State. It has been said that the Transvaal consul general has a secret service wire directly connecting Lourenco Marques with Komati Poort, and it is well known in Delagoa Bay that Mr. Pott is possessed of the most reliable information of Boer "successes" many hours earlier than any man in Africa. This is extremely detrimental to British interests in South Africa. Mr. Pott is the direst intermediary between Dr. Leyds at The Hague and the Boer-cum-Hollander regime in Pretoria. This worthy Hollander has a perfect knowledge of English, Portuguese, French and German. He is comptroller of Transvaal customs and railway, director of the Transvaal nationad bank and head of the Dutch East African company. By virtue of his long residence in Delagoa Bay, Mr. Pott is a persona grata in all Portuguese official circles. Some two years back the Portuguese newspaper, O Futuro, published in Lourenco Marques, dedicated a special article to Mr. Pott, in which he was eulogized as "King Pott of Africa."

SAVED TWO TRAINS.

The Heroic Deed of a Modest Watchman on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

It does not take heroics to make a hero; it only takes a man bent on doing his duty in the face of odds. Such a man is among the employes of the Canadian Pacific railway in British Columbia. He is a watchman, and he puts duty first and life second. The Michigan Christian Advocate tells the story of his devotion:

Not long ago a bridge on his section of road caught fire and tumbled into the raging mountain river. It was midnight, and the watchman was alone in the mountains. Coming toward that yawning gap was the limited express from the east, while from the west an excursion train containing 400 American journalists also drew near.

The excursion train was due first, and it was coming from the side opposite that on which the watchman stood.

The man did not hesitate. He plunged into the swollen stream, reached the other shore, ran to the flag station and signaled the excursion train. Then he disappeared in the darkness.

Back to the river he ran without a moment's pause, cast himself in and crossed again. Another rapid run to the flag station on that side, and the exhausted watchman, ready to sink with fatigue, stood by the Pacific flyer that had been brought to a stop at the flag station east of the bridge. He had saved two trains, and perhaps a thousand lives.

His own comment on the occurrence was that he had done his duty.

MOUTH IN QUEER PLACE.

The Voracious Shark Is Well Fitted by Nature for His Rapacious Mission.

No doubt the shark's mouth is placed so much beneath the projecting muzzle, under which also the nostrils lie, that it may serve its proper purpose in the best way. In all records of the habits of the fish, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, we are told that it can and does bite out large chunks of flesh from the dead bodies of whales and even from living victims of its attack; and it is easily seen that if its mouth was like that of other fishes the necessary average would be lacking. A further reason seems to be that the shark by this peculiar position of its mouth is compelled to turn upon its back to strike and is thus able to deliver its onset from below with more deadly effect. This formidable strength of jaw is backed up by a most terrible array of teeth, of which in some species there are as many as six rows all round. Each tooth is saw-edged and pointed, and some of the largest are as much as two inches in breadth at their base. These lie flat against the jaws and can be raised by separate muscles at will, so that, as the shark darts upon its prey, they spring on end, as a cat's claws are stuck out from its paws. This arrangement will not allow anything once bolted to return, so that a shark's mouth is a veritable death trap.

Crime Upon Crime.

In sentencing a prisoner to be hanged for the murder of a soldier Lord Eskgrove dilated upon the crime as follows: "And not only did you murder him, whereby he was bereaved of his life, but you did thrust, or push, or pierce, or project, or propel the lethal weapon through the bellyband of his regimental breeches, which were his majesty's!"

Tomb of the Czars.

It is not generally known that the remains of all the czars of Russia since Peter the Great lie in a memorial chapel built on one of the islands of the Neva. All the cenotaphs are exactly alike, each being a block of white marble, without any decoration whatever.

DELINQUENT TAX LIST FOR POLK COUNTY

Showing Delinquents in 1897 and in Prior Years.

CLERK OF COURT'S NOTICE OF DELINQUENT ABSOLUTE TAX SALE.
(Chapter 322, General Laws of 1899.)
State of Minnesota, County of Polk—ss.
District Court 14th Judicial District.
THE STATE OF MINNESOTA

To all Persons, Companies or Corporations who have or claim an estate, right, title or interest in, claim to or lien upon any of the several pieces or parcels of land described in the list hereto attached.

There has been filed in the office of the Clerk of the District Court of the County of Polk, the list of taxes on real estate in the County of Polk and also the taxes upon real estate in Red Lake County, formerly a part of Polk County, State of Minnesota, which taxes appear to have become delinquent in the year 1897, or any prior year or years, as set forth in the following list, and which taxes have not been satisfied by payment, redemption or sale of the real estate to actual purchasers, and which said lands have been struck off to or forfeited to the State of Minnesota in proceedings to enforce payment of taxes and penalties upon the lands in said list described, remaining delinquent and unpaid on the first Monday in January of each of the following years, viz: 1881, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1887, 1888, 1889, 1890, 1891, 1892, 1893, 1894, and 1895, of which said list that hereto attached is a copy pursuant to the provisions of Chapter 322, General Laws of 1899.

THEREFORE, you, and each of you, are hereby required to file in the office of said clerk on or before the 20th day of March, 1900, your answer in writing, setting forth any objections or defense which you may have to the taxes, judgment, striking off or forfeiture, or any part thereof, upon or with reference to any piece or parcel of land described in said list, in to or on which you may have or claim any estate, right, title, interest, claim or lien; and in default thereof, judgment will be entered against such piece or parcel of land for the entire amount of taxes, and interest at the rate of ten per centper annum since said taxes became delinquent, as aforesaid, together with all the costs of these proceedings.

E. E. LOMMEN,
Clerk of the District Court.
(SEAL)

In the following list "a" represents acres "e" east; "n" north; "s" south; "w" west; "ne" northeast; "nw" northwest; "se" southeast; "sw" southwest; "bl" or "blk" block; "r" or "R" range; "&" and; "tp" or "twp" township; "ft" feet; "st" street; "cor" corner; "frl" fractional; "pt" part; "$" dollars; "do" or " means a repetition of the word or words in the line above on which it occurs. The spaces between figures in columns of figures represents the decimal point between dollars and cents, and all figures that follow any dollar mark as above represented, are to be read in the same manner as though the dollar mark was there.

A LIST OF PIECES OR PARCELS OF LAND in the County of Polk and State of Minnesota, which appear to have become delinquent in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven (1897) or any prior year or years and have not been satisfied by payment, redemption or sale of the the real estate to actual purchasers. Said list includes all taxes not barred by statute of limitations upon any real estate which may have been at any tax sale struck off to, or declared to be forfeited to the State, whether such sale or forfeiture was valid or invalid; and said list also contains a description of each piece or parcel of land upon which such taxes shall not have been paid or satisfied as aforesaid, and opposite such description the name of the owner to whom assessed if known, if unknown the fact is so stated, and the amount of taxes, principal and interest due thereon, according to the provisions of an act entitled "An Act to enforce the payment of taxes which became delinquent in and prior to the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven (1897)." approved April 20th 1899. Any person having an interest in any tract or parcel or real estate included in such forfeited list may redeem the same at any time before the sale thereof, as provided for in said act, by paying into the county treasury the original amount of taxes due thereon, with ten (10) per cent per annum interest on the amount during the time said taxes have been delinquent, together with all costs of proceedings here in described, which list of lands, owners' names and to whom assessed, with year or years delinquent, amounts of taxes, principal and interest due thereon, is as follows, to-wit:

State of Minnesota, County of Polk—ss.

John Gleason, being first duly sworn, upon his oath says, that he is Auditor of said county and state aforesaid, and that the foregoing, consisting of 363 sheets numbered 1 to 358, and five sheets numbered 80½, 81½, 82½, 83½ and 349 1-2, both inclusive is a true and correct list of all pieces and parcels of land within said county of Polk, in the state aforesaid, that appeared to have become delinquent in the year 1897, or in prior year or years and has not been satisfied by payment, redemption or sale of the real estate to actual purchasers. Said list includes all taxes delinquent, principal and interest, upon any such piece and parcel of land or real estate, that has been at any tax sale struck off to, or declared to be forfeited to, the state, whether said sale or forfeiture was valid or invalid, and that opposite each description appears the name of the owner or to whom assessed, if known, if unknown it is so stated, and the total amount of taxes delinquent and interest due thereon, to the 7th day of May 1900, according to the provisions of chapter 322, General Laws of Minnesota, being an act entitled, "An Act to enforce the payment of taxes which become delinquent in and prior to the year 1897," approved April 20th, 1899, so far as the same appears to me of record in my said office.

Subscribed and sworn before me this 20th day January, A. D. 1900.

JOHN GLEASON
County Auditor.

Office of County Auditor, Polk County Minnesota.

I hereby certify that the foregoing copy of, the list of real estate taxes delinquent on the 1st Monday of January, A. D. 1900, hereto attached, has been received from the Clerk of the District Court in and for the said county of Polk.

JOHN GLEASON,
County Auditor, Polk County, Minnesota.

Sham Antiquities.

A few years ago, in Soho, London, there was a factory for antique coppers which is probably still in operation. The legitimate business of the place was the manufacture of stewpans and kettles, but when trade was dull in that way any sort of antiques for which there happened to be a demand was produced instead.

An old incense burner, for example, would be reproduced by the dozen by hammering over a chuck. If ornamented with pierced work, the copies would be coated with asphaltum, through which the design would be traced, when it would then be eaten out in an acid bath, saving the time which would be required to cut out the pattern with a piercing saw. The bath leaves thin edges, by which such work may be detected.

The work would then be [illegible] and would be permitted to oxidize and scale. Pickling with muriatic acid and salt, to produce a good coating of verdigris, would complete the job. Sometimes these "antiques" would be purposely broken and would be clumsily mended with solder or with pure tin if the piece was to pass for a very ancient one. Chiseled metal was reproduced by casting and "dubbing" over with the hammer, then pickling, annealing and bending. In such ways helmets, copper and brass castings for antique furniture and the like were made.—Art Amateur.

Horse Racing on the Stage.

In racing scenes the horses do run at full speed. They run, however, not on the fixed stage, but on what may be called treadmills, which keep the horses in front of the house for longer or shorter periods, according as they are moved quickly or slowly. A picket fence, placed between the audience and the course, not only makes the scene more realistic; it also hides the mechanism of the treadmills. This fence has contributed in another way to add to the effect by being moved in opposition to the direction of the horses and so lending to their apparent speed.

As to the sounds made by the footfalls of horses to be heard as though passing outside an interior scene, they are reproduced by the dried hoofs of dead horses or wooden imitations mounted on handles and hammered against surfaces of stone, gravel, sod or whatever the occasion may demand. They are also more elaborately manufactured by revolving a cylinder with pins protruding from the surface. These pins are arranged, like the spurs on a hand organ roller, to imitate trotting, galloping or walking when struck against other substances. If the sound of a carriage is to be added to the trampling of horses, wheels are run on sand.—Cassell's Magazine.

Needed In His Business.

"I've decided," said the dignified old man, "to let you have that young Briteley after all if you are positive that you can't be happy without him."

"Oh, father," the beautiful girl cried, "you don't know how happy you have made me! Now I can see the gates of paradise opening. Dear, dear, good, old papa! Let me kiss you for those sweet words! Oh, I can hardly wait to fly to him and tell him the glorious news. He will be so glad! We shall all be so happy now. It seems almost like a lovely dream! I can hardly believe that I am awake! But, tell me, what has made you change your mind? Yesterday when I tried to plead for him you said you would never permit us to see each other again. Ah, if you had known how those words bruised my heart! What has happened, father, to make you relent?"

He kissed her fondly and then, with tears in his eyes, replied:

"I sat in a little game of poker where he happened to have a hand last night, and if we don't get that money back in the family some way my business is going to suffer."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Afraid to Bid.

At an auction sale of miscellaneous goods at a country store the auctioneer put up a buggy robe of fairly good quality. An old farmer inspected it closely, seemed to think there was a bargain in it, and yet he hesitated to bid.

"Think it cheap?" asked the auctioneer, crying a 10 cent bid.

NURSE TOMKINS

Nurse Tomkins didn't profess to be "none of your 'ighly trained nurses"—she didn't 'old with "them newfangled notions"—she didn't see "where the thermometer and the 'ygienic measures came in. People didn't live no longer than before all this washing and rinsing was started."

Thus soliloquized Nurse Tomkins in my presence after I had engaged her services to attend my wife for a passing and slight indisposition. Mildred did not improve rapidly, not so quickly as her anxious husband would have liked, and at last—that was on the Sunday—with a deeply rooted sense of distrust toward her nurse, I decided on taking up my station in the invalid's room. I entered. The fire burned low, the window was open, and the cold, bleak wind of an early spring day blew in. "Your fire is low, Mildred," I said. "The room feels cold." Nurse Tomkins adjusted her cap, settled her apron and commenced a series of attacks on the fire. Bang, bang, bang, went the poker. I looked at the woman with a look which has caused a brave man to flinch. "These beastly lodging 'ouse grates—small and poky," said the nurse under her breath. The fire sent up a fitful blaze, more coals were shoveled on, a rattle of fire irons, and the nurse's work was done. Tomkins walked to the bed, collecting bottles in her progress. One was eau de cologne, another a salts bottle. "Smell these!" she exclaimed, presenting the apex of each bottle to the patient's nose. Mildred was taken by surprise, and the strong salts made her gasp. I commanded my language and sat still, considering the situation with a calmness which afterward astonished me. So long as I was by it was all right, I said to comfort myself, and I would always be by so long as Mildred was being "nursed."

I ensconced myself in an easy chair which was drawn up to the fireside. On the dressing table near by a little cloud of blue smoke ascended to the ceiling, a sickly eastern smell emanating from the burning paper. I leaned over and blew it out. I did not approve of my wife's room smelling of these scents. Nurse saw the action. She stopped shaking the pillows into a hard mass and looked at me questioningly. "Them papers purify the atmosphere of a sickroom," she said in explanation. "At my last case I burned them day and night. Captain Eames' wife—she was a real lady, and she liked fine smells." Mildred told me afterward Mrs. Eames' name had been a familiar one to her and that she appeared to have been a most remarkable woman. She evidently was a good patient in so far as endurance went. "Mrs. Eames and me," continued Nurse, resuming her "explanation" of the burning papers, "we 'ad the same views on your modern nursing and them 'igh and mighty young modern nurses who are 'aving their 'eads turned by all them newfangled notions and them funds and associations—and Mrs. Eames and me we often said as 'ow it was all fudge! Now, in 'er case," Nurse Tomkins went on, "them doctors ordered 'er to eat nothing all day long. Well, that wasn't the first case of typhoid I 'ad nursed—and I knew well the pretty young creature's strength couldn't 'old out against starvation for weeks—she, as was accustomed to ride in her carriage and 'ave the best victuals in the land—so I just judges for myself, and I takes 'er up a cut of meat on the sly—she that sad and beseeching-like for a bit of something to eat—and didn't she just perk up at it! And looked so pretty with all her laces and frills round her bonny face—'twasn't the first case of typhoid I 'ad by no means."

"And Mrs. Eames recovered?" I asked.

"The pretty creature, she died in my arms as gentle and mild as a lamb, and I never saw a prettier deathbed," responded Tomkins. "She was a real lady—the flowers in her room were something lovely—and 'er husband, he sobbed 'is eyes out, and no wonder—she that was worth a dozen of 'im—and when I left that 'ouse, after all my devoted duty, 'e never so much as give me a sixpence more than my pay."

Mildred's head tossed restlessly on the pillow. "Nurse," I said, and I held the door open as I spoke, "will you come and speak to me a minute down stairs?" I left the room. Tomkins followed me into the dining room.

"Tell me," I asked her, "what training have you had in nursing?"

"Twelve years," she answered, her head held high.

"Twelve years—at a hospital?"

"Lor' bless you, no sir; I never required no teaching. I was a born nurse, and I pick it up as I go."

"As you go?" I asked. "Your institution accepts untrained nurses, then?"

"That it doesn't, sir," she returned, with spirit. "I had five years' experience when I joined. I was a nurse ever since I was 8 years old. My poor father, he suffered"—

"But," I put in, interrupting what I guessed might develop into a lengthy anecdote, "you have had no training then—no training as a nurse?"

"Nature taught me," said Tomkins. "Nature and observation. If I saw anything made a patient worse, I altered my treatment next time. I've 'ad great experience with the sick, as I am seldom called in unless it's an incurable case."

I had been pacing the narrow limits of the room while Tomkins spoke, and when she ceased I was conscious of a tremor in my speech. I didn't say much, as little as I could, but I paid Tomkins for her "services," and I satisfactorily conveyed to her mind that I could dispense with them in the future. For the sake of peace I gave the woman a few shillings beyond what she expected, but her absence, I considered, would be cheaply bought at thrice that sum, and I never felt more relieved than when I heard the rumble of the cab down the quiet seaside road. Tomkins took the landlady into her confidence before her departure, and I heard her say in the loud voice she assumed in the sickroom, "'E'll kill that dear little wife of 'is just as likely as not. 'E's had no experience with the sick, and them young husbands ain't fit to 'ave the care of a young wife. Now, if I staid"—

But I wanted to hear no more, and when I stood next by Mildred's side I took her hand in mine as if I could never let it go, and a feeling of heroism seized me that Mildred was saved from the jaws of death and that I was her savior.—Westminster Budget.

He Could Shoot Straight.

Said the man who had traveled: "Years ago in a western frontier town a traveler, footsore and weary, arrived one afternoon and made his way down the one street of the burg. He was suddenly startled by the sounds of shots, and, looking up, discovered four men shooting at one another. The men were standing at the four corners of an imaginary square, and each was shooting at the man catacorner to him. Being in what he supposed a safe position, he paused to watch the outcome of the fray, when a bullet, going wide of its intended mark, cut by his ear. That roused his wrath, and, drawing his pistol, he dropped the man in his tracks who had all but dropped him. Another bullet flying wide from its mark, but near to the stranger, caused him to lay out one of the other pair, and the two remaining men sought safety in flight. In that particular town duels had been previously comparatively harmless amusements, owing to the poor marksmanship of the contestants, but the man who could shoot had arrived, and the inhabitants, although they turned out to greet him in a body and grant him the freedom of the city, did so in manifest awe and trepidation.

"Whenever he told the story afterward, he used to wind it up impressively by saying, 'And, boys, in that town after that they went around me as if I had been a swamp.'"—New York Tribune.

Conquered the Professor.

The mighty Jowett of Oxford invited a student to walk with him. After they had been on the road for about 30 minutes the pupil finally spunked up courage and remarked, "Nice day, professor."

"Do you really think so?" was the faraway answer of Jowett.

Another half hour passed, and the boy stammered out:

"Nice road, professor."

The teacher responded, "Do you really think so?"

The matriculate began to boil in his bones and to get even more frightened, but he managed to again blurt out, "Clouds seem to be filling up with rain, professor," to which the answer was:

"Do you really think so?"

The two returned to the college ground, and the professor said, "Well, young man, we have been walking for several hours, and everything you said has been as stupid as it possibly could be."

His companion replied, "Do you really think so?"

The professor looked at the young man a moment. Then he smiled and grasped his hands warmly. From that time on conversation never flagged during their walks.—Saturday Evening Post.

Puzzled the Porter.

The pet fad of a certain actress is shoes, and she never travels without a pair of shoe trees in her satchel. One season she was touring the west. When she went to bed in the Pullman the first night eastward from Butte, she took off her trim walking boots and, as her custom is, slipped the trees into them and set them under the edge of the berth. It was broad daylight when she was awakened by the respectful and somewhat awestricken voice of the porter. She drew the curtains aside and looked out into the aisle. The porter was standing there, holding the shoes in his hand.

"Here they is, lady," he said.

"Well, just put them down under the berth, please," said she. The man hesitated a moment.

"Can you—can you put them on by youse'f?" he asked.

"What, the shoes?" asked the lady.

"No, miss," answered the porter. "I means your feet. Ain't these yere things feet?"

Since then she has carried the ghastly looking boot trees in her trunk.—Washington Post.

The Wrong Bird.

A certain conjurer once had an experience which was highly comical, though quite disastrous from a professional point of view.

Having produced an egg from a previously empty bag, he announced that he would follow up this trick by bringing from the bag the hen by which the egg had been laid. This little arrangement he had left to his confederate to carry out.

He proceeded to draw the bird from the bag in which it had previously been placed, but what was his consternation on finding that the alleged hen was an old rooster, which strutted about the stage with ruffled feathers and offended dignity and set up as vigorous a crowing as if he had just awakened from his nocturnal slumbers.

The whole audience shrieked with laughter, and the unfortunate conjurer made a "bolt" for his dressing room.

Variable.

"What is this title 'professor' that I hear so often?" asked the distinguished foreigner.

"Well," answered Miss Cayenne, "it's getting rather hard to tell. Usually it means a man who knows more than any one else, and sometimes it means a man who simply won't work."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Not Forgotten.

"Did your grandmother remember you in her will?"

A Three Cornered War.

When Colonel Cartwell was military governor of Norfolk under the Confederacy in 1862, he ordered the British consul to report for duty on the home guard. To this the Englishman objected on the ground of being consul at Norfolk.

"To what government?" asked Colonel Cartwell.

"To the United States government," was the reply.

"But you are in the Confederate states, and you must show papers accrediting you to the Confederate States of America," said the colonel.

"But my government doesn't recognize you as a government," said the consul.

"Very well, then; my government doesn't recognize you as consul," briskly retorted Colonel Cartwell. "Shoulder your musket and join your company."

At this the peacefully disposed consul threatened to have a gunboat come and bombard the place before he would serve.

"That's just what I'd like to see," returned the colonel cheerily, "for then the United States will fight you, as she claims that Norfolk is still part of the Union, and between England and the United States fighting we shall go free."

At last the consul appealed to Mr. Benjamin, the Confederate secretary of war, who ordered his exemption from military duty, and the "three cornered war" so desired by Colonel Cartwell never came to pass.—Youth's Companion.

Unique Wedding Present.

Most people know of the peculiar circumstances under which Robert Louis Stevenson won his wife. But even more romantic and astounding was the unique wedding gift he got with her.

When Stevenson met his future fate at Barbizon, a famous artists' resort near Paris, she was the wife of Mr. Osborne, an Oakland gentleman. The friendship thus formed led Stevenson to pay a visit to California. He arrived at Monterey in a dying condition, but the loving care of Mrs. Osborne and her sister, Nellie Van der Grift, gradually won him back to life. The nursing completed his infatuation for the lady—an infatuation which he did not pretend to conceal. Fortunately Osborne raised no objections. He not only agreed to the divorce, but with a magnanimity rarely excelled actually attended the wedding breakfast. There he found his opportunity.

Mrs. Stevenson's one source of regret was the positive loss of her son, Lloyd Osborne, whom, of course, the father had the right to claim. Osborne made a happy speech, felicitating the newly married couple, and wound up by offering the most original of wedding presents. "To the bride," he said, "I give that which of all things is nearest and dearest to her heart, her own son."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

One He Didn't Get.

The following story of Ben Butler was told by a man who said he was present on the occasion:

"Shortly after the war General Butler delivered a lecture at Pike's Opera House in Cincinnati. The general was well on to the climax of his speech when slowly from the flies overhead descended a large wooden spoon on the end of a string. Down and down it came until it reached a point two or three inches above the speaker's head, and then it stopped.

"The audience, of course, was convulsed with mirth, but owing to his well known visual infirmity the general was the last to discover the spoon, and indeed would probably not have noticed it at all except that in making an emphatic gesture to italicize a point his hand struck the suspended spoon.

"Looking up, he recognized the enemy and took in the situation at a glance. Without any sign of embarrassment or confusion he detached it from the string and, with the remark, 'Hello, there's one I didn't get,' laid it down on the stage and triumphantly finished his address."

Army Flogging.

Soon after General Gatacre was appointed an ensign in the Seventy-seventh foot he turned out with the company to which he was attached to witness the flogging of a soldier. The man, who had been convicted of a serious offense and was later to be drummed out of the corps, took his punishment badly, screaming a great deal. Ensign Gatacre shut his eyes and turned white in the face, as though he would faint. When the punishment was over, he remarked to his color sergeant, "If I see much more of this, I'll sell out."

The "noncom" responded, "You'll get used to it in time, sir."

"Used to it? I'm sure I never shall!" responded the ensign. Flogging in the army was soon abolished, however, and the future general remained in the service.

What Offended Her.

Driver—Nothing particular. Why?

Milk Dealer—She's sent word that she don't want us to serve her any more. You must have said something to offend her.

Driver—No, I didn't. I simply asked her for the money for the week's milk. She says, "You'd better chalk it up," and I says, "We do that already."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Mentioned as Usual.

Clara—Did the newspapers notice your papa at the banquet?

Freddie—Yes.

Clara—Well, mamma said she could not see his name in the list.

Freddie—No, but the list ends up with "and others." That means papa. They always mention him that way.—Tit-Bits.

A Cork Safe.

"The most curious safe I ever saw," said a traveling man, "was a cork one, and it was made by an ingenious Dutch mechanic for a one time famous confidence man named Dr. Baggs, who operated in Denver, Salt Lake City and Frisco. The safe was a folding affair, made of paper on a backing of sheet cork, and, when it was opened up, was six feet high and looked exactly like the real thing. As it was always placed in a corner, it had only two sides, but every visible detail was complete—combination knob, hinges, lettering, bolt heads and all. When folded, it could be carried in an ordinary dress suit case. Baggs used the thing in a fake lottery office which was of itself a marvel of trick furnishing.

"When the victim entered the place, it looked like an ordinary business establishment, with desks, railings, maps on the walls, safe in the corner and several clerks at work on books. The instant he left a roll top desk was opened up into a bed, the railing was folded together and slipped into a closet, a table was transformed into a washstand, a cabinet turned into a bureau, the safe was put away in its case, the curtains were pulled down, and the room was to all appearances a simple sleeping apartment. By that means the poor dupe was never able to find the place where he had been bunkoed."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Red Tape Illustrated.

A correspondent passing hurriedly into the room of the committee on rivers and harbors pulled the knob off the door.

"How can I get that fixed, do you think?" asked the congressman. "Shall I get the carpenter or the locksmith?"

"The locksmith, I suppose."

"No, sir. Were I to send for the locksmith he would tell me to consult the architect of the capitol. He has no authority to fix doorknobs. Doorknobs are permanent fixtures and are solely within the jurisdiction of the architect of the capitol."

"Do you see that bookcase there?" said the committee secretary. "I caused the carpenter to paste some cloth on the inside of the glass doors in order that the books might not show. He did the work, but when he had finished I noted that he had not cleaned the glass before he put the cloth on. The thing looked so disreputable that I asked him why he had not cleaned the glass. He told me that the glass was a permanent fixture and that he had no authority to touch it, but that the placing of the cloth upon it was a temporary matter and was entirely within the province of his labors. The whole thing's got to be done all over again."—Washington Cor. Cleveland Plain Dealer.

She Didn't Buy It.

The following story will show the high price that illustrators of reputation command for their work: A young woman who had received treatment from Dr. S. Weir Mitchell of Philadelphia and was very fond of him decided, at a recent celebration of his birthday, that a fitting and appropriate gift would be the presentation of one of the original drawings of Mr. Howard Pyle for "Hugh Wynne." Forthwith she invaded The Century company's sanctum and, with her fingers tenderly grasping a new $10 note, asked to buy the drawing. She was informed that these pictures were never sold unless exceptions were made in cases where the artist himself or the author wished to make the purchase.

"Just so," said the young woman. "I wish to present it to Dr. Mitchell."

"Ah, in that case," said the gentleman at the desk, "we shall take pleasure in giving it to you at the exact price we paid for it, which is $100."

The little lady in her excitement dropped the $10 bill. The gentleman at the desk picked it up for her and smiled while she hurriedly took her departure. The good doctor was presented with a less appropriate gift that year.—New York Times.

Clear and to the Point.

The following is taken from a hotel advertisement in the Calcutta Times: "Gentlemen who come in hotel not say anything about their meals they will be charged for, and if they should say beforehand that they are going out to breakfast or dinner, etc., and if they say that they not have anything to eat they will be charged, and if not so they will not be charged, or unless they bring it to the notice of the manager of the place, and should they want to say anything they must order the manager for one, not any one else, and unless they bring not it to the notice of the manager they will be charged for the least things according to the hotel rate, and no fuss will be allowed afterward about it."

A Poultry Problem.

A Somerville man borrowed a neighbor's hen on the pretense that he wanted her to sit. As soon as he got the hen he broke up the sitting habit and got her to laying eggs. In the next six weeks she laid two dozen eggs. These he sold for 40 cents a dozen, and with the 80 cents that he got for them he bought the hen. Now the question arises whether the original owner of the hen was fooled or not.—Somerville Journal.

Casualties.

Building No. 7 of the construction department of the navy yard at Brooklyn was burned. Loss $100,000.

Dr. Bromand of Auburn, Ind., was seriously burned by mistaking gasoline for oil and trying to kindle a fire with it.

Frank D. Allen of Williamsburg, Kan., died from an overdose of morphine taken to produce sleep. Mr. Allen was a well known newspaper man, having been connected with papers at Chicago, Omaha and Audubon, Iowa. His father is one of the wealthiest stockmen in Iowa.

Martin Jordan, an engineer, his wife Mary and their five-months-old boy were asphyxiated by gas in their home at Chicago. The bodies of the three were found the next day. A leak in a gas pipe in the basement deluged the house with gas, and when found they had been dead for several hours. The leak was so large that when workmen from the gas company attempted to close it one of them was overcome by the strong fumes and was revived with difficulty.

Crimes and Criminals.

BRITISH FALL BACK

FORCED FROM THEIR POSITIONS IN THE COLESBERG DISTRICT.

Casualties Are Not Given but the Loss Is Supposed to Have Been Large—Lord Roberts Is Evidently Preparing for an Advance—Boers Mastery of the Colesberg District Causes Fear of a Dutch Rebellion —Doubtful if the British Can Hold Rensberg — Severe Fighting During the Retreat.

Rensberg, Feb. 15.—The Boers have again driven in the British outposts on the western flank, all outposts at Bastard's Nek, Hobkirk's Windmill and other points, retiring to Maeder's Farm. There were several casualties, but details have not yet been received.

-o-

London, Feb. 15.—A dispatch to the Evening News from Rensberg says severe fighting occurred during the British retreat, the various outposts on both sides suffering heavy losses. The dispatch adds that it is doubtful if Rensberg can be held.

-o-

London, Feb. 15.—The enforced retirement of the British from Colesberg district, and probably under heavy loss, is the news this morning. And thus, at the time Lord Roberts is about to make an attack on the Free State the Boers make a dash in an unknown force, not far from the vital line of communication at De Aar and Orange rivers. This may not be a serious attack. Nevertheless this news produces an unpleasant effect here. Gen. French met a reverse at the hands of the Boers in December. On Jan. 1 it was announced that he could take Colesberg with a slight addition to their force. These were sent, but at the same time the Boers were reinforced. The British lines had been extended east and west, so at the opening of the week they constituted a great horseshoe twenty-five miles in length. The lines were not continuous, but all the strong points were held. Gen. French, when he joined Lord Roberts, presumably took most of his cavalry force, and Gen. Clements was left with the infantry to hold the Boers in check. Commandant Delerry, with a double turning movement, has compelled Clements to concentrate at Colesburg, besides threatening Lord Roberts' communication. The Boers' mastery of the district has caused a fear of Dutch rebellion, but this no doubt would be promptly suppressed as large British forces are available not far away. Lord Roberts is evidently preparing for an advance. One informant, who has intimate relations with the war office, anticipates no movement within the next day or two, as a number of correspondents who have been with Gen. Buller have gone to Durban for a few days' rest under the impression that nothing will be done for a day or two.

The Fighting Near Colesberg.

London, Feb. 15.—A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Rensberg, dated yesterday, says: "There has been hard fighting for two days near Colesberg, the Boers making strenuous efforts to outflank the British there. The enemy occupies strong positions from Achtereang, through Potfontein, to a point five miles south of Jasfontein. The fighting at our outpost camps has been very severe during the last few days. Yesterday the Boers attacked the position of the Worcestershires to the south of Colesberg. Fighting continued all day and after dark it was considered necessary to withdraw to Rensberg. Our losses are not yet known. On the left the West Australians, Wiltshires and Berkshires had hot fighting, but held their positions against long odds. The Boer losses were considerable. Owing to the growing difficulty experienced by convoys in reaching the camps, all of the latter were vacated last night and the troops withdrawn to Rensberg. The Boers are burning the farms of the loyalists, but the latter have contrived to get away with their stock."

SIGN OF A BREAK.

Is Seen in the Lines of Kentucky Democrats.

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 15. — The first sign of a break in the Democratic lines was seen yesterday. It came in the shape of a resolution offered by Senator Triplett providing that upon adjournment on Thursday the legislature name Frankfort as its next meeting place. While no action upon the resolution was taken yesterday, it was taken to foreshadow a determination on the part of the legislature to reassemble at the state capitol probably before the end of the week. The resolution provides that if the military has been removed and conditions are safe at the state capital the legislature adjourn to meet there. This is made more apparent by the fact that the Republican legislature has reassembled there. The indications are that the full legislature will be in session in Frankfort in a few days, and it is believed normal conditions will be restored in the state by two or three weeks. That much time at least will be required for the adjustment of the issues between the parties. If the federal courts decide they have jurisdiction it will take much longer.

Frankfort, Ky., Feb. 15. —Another day of extreme quiet passed here, there being no developments in the political situation from either side. The eyes of the leaders on both sides are on Cincinnati, where Judge Taft, of the federal court, will render a decision to-day on the question whether the federal courts have jurisdiction in the contest case, and little else is talked of here.

Taylor Recognized by Federal Court.

Yardmore, Ind. T., Feb. 15.—The authority of Gov. Taylor as chief executive of Kentucky was recognized here yesterday by the officials of the federal court when they surrendered Porter Fletcher, charged with a serious crime, to Sheriff Sam Mitchell of Kentucky upon the requisition of Gov. Taylor. The sheriff and his prisoner started for Frankfort last night.

IN MEMORY OF LINCOLN.

Annual Banquet of the Marquette Club at Chicago.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—The fifteenth annual Lincoln day banquet of the Marquette club was given last night at the Auditorium hotel, covers being laid for 500 guests. The banquet hall was hung with pictures of Lincoln, McKinley, Dewey, Schley and Sampson and the various generals of the Civil war. The president of the club, Henry B. Wickersham, presided. After the president had delivered his address the following speakers responded to toasts: Gov. D. S. Russell of North Carolina, Hon. Murat Halstead, Hon. J. K. Cubbison, Hon. James P. Cleary and Hon. Bartlett Tripp.

Depew on Lincoln.

New York, Feb. 14.—Senator Depew presided and made the principal address at the banquet of the Republican club at Delmonico's last night. The dinner was attended by 1,000 members and their guests. A notable guest was Lincoln's registrar of the treasury, L. S. Chittenden, who is now an octogenarian.

ANTI-TRUST CONFERENCE.

Good Progress Made at the First Day's Proceedings.

Chicago, Feb. 14.—Last night at the close of the first day's proceedings of the anti-trust conference called by the National Anti-Trust League good progress had been made with the set speeches, of which a dozen or more were delivered. The resolution committee was busy while the main body of the delegates were listening to the speeches at Central Music hall. A set of resolutions was formulated by the committee covering the following points: Government ownership of all railways and telegraph lines; the abolition of all special privileges by legislative enactments; placing on the free list of all trust goods and direct legislation by petition from the people. The discussion in committee was carried out on these lines. An amendment was offered for the taxation of all franchises but was voted down on the ground that such action would simply legalize special provisions.

FITZ'S JAW WORK.

Says He Wants to Fight Champion Jeffries.

New York, Feb. 14. — Bob Fitzsimmons, the pugilist, was noticed in a box at a Brooklyn theater yesterday by an improviso singer, who devoted one verse of his song to the ex-champion. This provoked yells and calls for a speech from the audience. Fitzsimmons arose in the box and, facing the audience, said:

"To-morrow I shall post a forfeit of $5,000 in Manhattan and issue a challenge to Jeffries to fight me again for any amount, preferably $10,000."

When the ex-champion had concluded some one shouted:

"Why don't you give Corbett another chance?"

WILL NOT TRY M'GIFFERT.

New Yor kPresbytery Disavows His Teachings and Lets It Go at That.

New York, Feb. 14.—The New York presbytery yesterday decided by a vote of 77 to 30 not to try Dr. Arthur G. McGiffert, of the Union Theological seminary, on the charges of heresy, preferred by Rev. G. W. Birch, the stated clerk of the presbytery, at the January meeting. A resolution was adopted declaring in effect that the action of the presbytery in December, when it decided not to try Dr. McGiffert for heresy, but to disavow his teachings, was sufficient under the circumstances, and the decision of the presbytery was that the charges should not be considered.

PARALYZES PARIS WORKMEN.

Rapidity With Which Americans Erect a Structure.

Chicago, Feb. 14. — Commissioner General Peck yesterday received a telegram from Paris saying the steel skeleton of the machinery building at the exposition has been completed. For the purpose of erecting this ten American workmen were taken to Paris. They started to erect a structure on Feb. 2 and the quick completion of the work is a marvel to the Paris workmen. Great haste was necessary in constructing this machinery annex, and the desired result was accomplished by employing American workmen.

SIBERIAN GRANT.

A Mining Concession Given by the Czar to an American Company.

Vladivostok, Feb. 14.—The czar has issued an imperial decree which, for the first time in the history of Siberia, grants mining rights to foreigners. It appears that the American Clarkson company has obtained the valuable concession of the right to conduct general mining operations throughout the maritime provinces with the exception of Okhotosk and Kamtschatka.

Closing in on Bogota.

Kingston, Jam., Feb. 14.—There are persistent reports here that the Colombian insurgents are closing in upon Bogota for the purpose of forcing a crisis, which the government is anxious to avoid on account of disaffection among the military as well as in the civil service. The end, however, is thought to be very near.

British Ship Goes Ashore.

New York, Feb. 14. — The British ship County of Edinburgh went ashore at about 10 o'clock last evening close by Manasquan life saving station on the Jersey shore, near Point Pleasant. The Edinburgh sailed from Cape Town Dec. 23 last for New York, in command of Capt. I. Webster.

Woman and Six Children Burned.

Petersburg, Va., Feb. 13.—The home of Martha Smith, colored, near Stoney Creek, was destroyed by fire Sunday and the woman and her six children burned up. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Released From the Ice Jam.

Buffalo, N. Y., Feb. 14.—The steamer Andrew Carnegie, of the Wilson Transportation company, the last of the vessels caught in the jam resulting from the floods of Friday, was released yesterday. Estimated damage, $15,000.

CRONJE ON THE RUN

SEEMINGLY IN FULL RETREAT FROM ROBERTS.

Kimberley Is Relieved by Gen. French, Who Immediately Pushes on to Get in Touch With the Retiring Enemy—Boers Completely Dispersed From Southern Side of Kimberley — Gen. French Lost a Few Men in Action—Evidence of Great Public Joy in England.

London, Feb. 18.—The war office announces that Gen. French reached Kimberley Thursday evening. Following is Lord Roberts' message to the war office:

"Jacobsdal, Feb. 16. 2 a. m.—French, with a force of artillery, cavalry and mounted infantry, reached Kimberley last evening, Thursday."

-o-

The war office makes public another dispatch from Field Marshal Lord Roberts, saying:

"The following from Gen. French was received this morning, 16th:

"'I have completely dispersed the enemy from the southern side of Kimberley, from Alexandersfontein to Oliphantsfontein, and am now going to occupy their ground. Have captured the enemy's laager and store depot supplies and supplies of ammunition. Casualties about twenty of all ranks wounded. Kimberley cheerful and well.'"

-o-

Gen. Roberts also sent the following dispatch, same place and date:

"I have good reason to believe the Magersfontein trenches have been abandoned and that the Boers are endeavoring to escape. Gen. French is securing the country north of Kimberley. One of Gen. Kelly-Kenny's brigades of infantry is in pursuit of a large Boer convoy moving toward Bloemfontein."

-o-

The Standard publishes the following dispatch from Wedraai, dated Thursday, at midnight: "Official news has been received here that Gen. French arrived at Kimberley to-day and dined at the club."

A dispatch to the Daily Mail from Lorenzo Marques, dated Feb. 15, says: Heavy fighting has occurred at Ramah, in the Free State, not far from Hopetown, Cape Colony. The Boers say they hold all the positions, the British finally retiring."

Cronje in Full Retreat.

London, Feb. 18.—Gen. Cronje, with a start of a day or two, is, seemingly in full retreat from Lord Roberts, moving northward. Gen. French, with the cavalry, simply stayed over night in Kimberley and then pushed on to get in touch with the retiring enemy. A long Boer wagon train is moving toward Bloemfontein, followed, presumably, by a large force of British infantry. In their hasty departure the Boers lost quantities of supplies and ammunition. Military opinion here is that Lord Roberts will not push far after the Boers immediately because of transport problems and the need of rest for the troops. He has 70,000 persons in his army and the whole Kimberley population. He must rebuild the railway from Modder river toward Kimberley and revictual the latter. Gen. French lost a few men only in action, but the forced marches and heat have probably made many ill. Numbers of remounts must be provided. Lord Roberts has wrought a genuine preliminary success, and the impression is that he has done enough for the present. He will need to prepare for another strike. All over England there is evidences of public joy. In every theater and public meeting, arorund the railway stations and the streets there have been and jubilation over the news. The newspapers are editorially rejoicing. Those who read the news closely see only one disturbing factor in the Cape situation, and that is the pressure of the Boers towards Lord Roberts' line of supply through De Aar, which was never more important than now. The Boers under Commandants De Lacey and Gobler are making a persistent effort to penetrate to the railway. They have pushed Gen. Clements back to Arundel and have outflanked him. All are within sixty miles, or two days' hard march of the Central railway. Doubtless Lord Roberts has left considerable forces along the line and can send back more if necessary.

Expressions of Gladness

In the lobbies of the house last night it was rumored that Gen. Buller had again crossed the Tugela. A special dispatch dated two days back and just transmitted from Chieveley says that an important move was then pending there, although contrary indications are found in the fact that seventy-five ambulance bearers have been temporarily disbanded and the further fact that traction engines are arriving at Durban from the front to be sent to Lord Roberts. More artillery is being sent to Lord Roberts from Cape Town.

Something on at Colenso.

London, Feb. 18.—The Pietermaritzburg correspondent of the Daily Mail, under date of Friday, says: "There are indications of decisive movement at Colenso. I have information that the Boers rely on their intrenchments and wire entanglements along the principal roads to check Lord Roberts' progress in the Free State. The roads to Ladysmith are studded with these formidable barriers. A British scouting column blew up the contents of the magazine at Nkardhla, Zululand, to prevent it falling into the hands of the Boers. The magazine contained a large supply of dynamite and ammunition."

REWARD FOR ARREST.

Ex-Quartermaster General White of Michigan Is Wanted.

Lansing, Mich., Feb. 18.—Secretary of State Stearns, as chairman of the state board of auditors, has authorized Sheriff Porter to offer a reward of $1,000 for the apprehension of ex-Quartermaster General William L. White, who is wanted on a charge of embezzlement of state funds while a member of the Michigan military board, and who disappeared several weeks ago.

HEARING FOR ITASCA SCADAL.

County Commissioner Called to Defend Themselves.

St. Paul, Feb. 16.—The three county commissioners of Itasca county are summoned to appear before Gov. Lind's commissioner to-day and show cause why they should not be removed. W. H. Leeman, the fourth, is already under charges of asking a bribe, and the fifth man had no part in the proceedings. T. R. Kane and Camden H. West are the commissioners appointed to take testimony. The charge is that W. V. Fuller, W. H. Everett and William E. Myers were directly or indirectly interested in a county appropriation of $2,000 to be expended in "judicious advertising" of the county with the understanding that it was to be given as a bonus for a hub factory. Fuller charged Leeman with asking a bribe from the appropriation, and from the testimony of the other three against Leeman came the inferences on which Gov. Lind based his charges against them. It is reported that they will let the hearing go by default and submit to removal.

FOR KIDNAPPING HIS WIFE.

Grand Jury Indicts M. L. Fuller on This Charge.

Albert Lea, Minn., Feb. 16. — The grand jury returned indictments against M. L. Fuller and Henry J. Pfeffer, two young men of this city, charging assault and kidnaping, the alleged victim being Laura L. Fuller, wife of the first named defendant. Bench warrants were issued for the apprehension of the parties, but only Fuller could be found, and upon arraignment he pleaded not guilty. Pfeffer has left the city. Fuller gave bond in the sum of $500 and was given his liberty.

HIS FOOT WAS CRUSHED.

Shock and Loss of Blood Cause the Death of a Woodsman.

Grand Rapids, Minn., Feb. 16.—Jerry Dunning, employed at one of the Shevlin-Carpenter camps, while unloading logs at the landing, had his right foot crushed. He was brought to the hospital in this village, where arrangements were made for the amputation of the injured foot. The man bled considerably on the way from camp and died shortly after entering the hospital. He was of middle age and his home was formerly in Geneva, N. Y. Nothing further is known of him.

BOAT SWAMPED.

Prominent Victoria Men Drowned While Duck Hunting.

Victoria, B. C., Feb. 16.—On Sunday morning ex-Ald. Richard Kelly, John M. Cordell, an attorney, and William Kennedy, a fisherman, left Nanaimo to shoot ducks. Their boat has been found lying on the mud banks under water, and the body of Kelly was plainly visible from the surface. People left for the scene to grapple for the other bodies. All three men were well known and leave families.

WISCONSIN REPUBLICANS.

The StateConvention to Be Held in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, Feb. 16.—The Republican state central committee, at a meeting just held, decided to call a state convention, to be held in Milwaukee on April 25. At this convention delegates-at-large to the Republican national convention at Philadelphia will be chosen. The convention will also select a new central committee and a chairman, though no change in the present committee is anticipated.

Rules for Lent.

Winona, Minn., Feb. 16. — Bishop Cotter has issued the rules for the observance of Lent in the Winona diocese. They are practically the same as for several years past and exempt the working men from the abstinence from the use of flesh meat. The spirit of self-denial is urged and a suggestion from Pope Leo attached to the effect that those who do not practice abstinence in their eating refrain from the use of alcoholic beveridges during Lent if they are adicted to the use of the same.

Narrow Escape From Drowning.

Beloit, Wis., Feb. 16. — Ex-Senator Clinton Babbitt had a narrow escape from drowning while crossing Turtle creek in an endeavor to drive some cattle to a place of safety during a storm. The creek had swollen from the recent rains and while crossing the stream on horseback Mr. Babbitt was swept from the animal's back and would have been drowned but for the assistance of a neighbor who rescued him in an unconscious condition.

Charged With Liquor Selling.

White Earth, Minn., Feb. 16. — Robert Allen Blakely was recently arrested for the alleged unlawful selling of liquor to Indians at Leech Lake. He was given a hearing before Court Commissioner Griffin at Detroit and was bound over in the sum of $300. This amount he failed to raise and was committed to jail at Duluth.

Farm Land Advances.

Langdon, Minn., Feb. 16.—Fred Bijalk, an extensive stock owner of Iowa, has purchased the Viall farm here of 265 acres, for $7,000. This is the second time during the past few months this farm has changed hands, and at a heavy advance in price each time. It will undoubtedly be converted into an extensive stock ranch.

His Neck Was Broken.

Huron, S. D., Feb. 16.—R. W. Hubbard of Wessington, for many years prominent in Beadle county politics, was driving in a buggy when the horses became frightened and ran away, throwing his from the buggy and breaking his neck.

Dogs Distroy Sheep.

Langdon, Minn., Feb. 16. — F. E. Woodward, the bonanza stock raiser of this locality, has suffered by dogs getting into his flock of fattening sheep and destroying a large number of them and wounding many more.

CRONJE GETS AWAY

DELAY OF A DAY GAVE HIM HIS CHANCE.

All Other of Lord Roberts' Movements Were Executed on Time—But for an Unavoidable Delay Cronje's Army Would Have Been Surrounded—British in Hot Pursuit —Buller Is Attempting Another Crossing of the Tugela and Has Seen Some Hot Fighting.

London, Feb. 20.—It is now practically confirmed that Gen. Cronje escaped. Every detail received, however, shows how admirably Lord Roberts' plans were laid and how well they succeeded. But for the unavoidable delay at Dekiel's drift, which was almost impassable for wagons, the whole Boer force would have been surrounded. The delay of one day gave them their chance for a hasty retreat.

All the other movements of Lord Roberts were executed exactly on time. Apparently Gen. Cronje is retreating with the main army, and even if he escapes altogether he will probably lose all his baggage. There are still two things doubtful about the capture of the British convoy. According to a Daily Mail correspondent with the convoy division, which consisted of 200 wagons, each loaded with 6,000 pounds of rations and forage, and each drawn by sixteen oxen, it was quite unexpectedly attacked by a commando supposed to come from Colesburg. The escort, consisting of eighty of the Gordon Highlanders, forty men of the army service corps and a few of Kitchener's horse, maintained a defense until the arrival of reinforcements, sustaining insignificant casualties.

The Standard's correspondent at Jacobsdal, telegraphing Thursday, says: "An attack was made yesterday upon the rear guard of our main body by a force of 1,400 Boers who were hurried up from Colesberg. They succeeded in capturing some of our wagons, but Lord Roberts did not delay his march to retake these. There were few casualties on our side. The last of our supply columns arrived from Honey Nest Kloof to-day, having met with no opposition on the way."

Specials from Ladysmith report an apparent movement on the part of Boers toward the Free State, presumably with the object of assisting Gen. Cronje. The news that Gen. Buller is attempting another crossing of the Tugela, east of Colenso, after the capture of Hlandwane hill, therefore gives great satisfaction. Buller's losses so far have been about twenty wounded. His entire army, with the exception of Gen. Hart's brigade is engaged in the operation. It is announced that the Channel squadron instead of going to Gibraltar, has been ordered to remain in British waters until March 1.

How Boers Get Supplies.

London, Feb. 20.—A dispatch from the Swaziland border, dated Friday, says: The Boer agent at Bremersdorp, Swaziland, has been maintaining regular communication with Delagoa Bay via Swaziland. Two coolie carriers have been bearing sacks supposed to contain salt through Tongaland. On examination it was found the sacks contained gunpowder."

Rumor of Cronje's Capture.

London, Feb. 20.—Rumors have been in circulation at the clubs and elsewhere in London that Gen. Cronje, with an army of 7,000, has been captured. Apparently they emanated from the continent. No confirmation of them can be obtained here.

Boers Active Around Ladysmith.

Ladysmith, Feb. 20.—The Boers have been very active here during the last few days and are evidently making a move somewhere. The garrison is greatly delighted to learn of the relief of Kimberley; is in excellent spirits and fit for anything.

Worked Havoc in Boer Trenches.

Chieveley, Feb. 20.—Gen. Buller has established his headquarters on Hussar Hill. Heavy artillery firing was maintained at intervals by both sides from Wednesday until Friday. The British slowly pushed the advance and their infantry occupied intrenched new positions at foot of Hussar Hill with slight losses. It is believed lyddite worked havoc in the Boer trenches. The Boers are supposed to have moved their big guns back over the Tugela Friday afternoon. The rifle fire has been heavy at times. The whole country is thickly wooded.

Pursuing Cronje.

London, Feb. 20.—The correspondent of the Times at Modder River, wiring yesterday, says: "Gen. Cronje's army of 10,000 men, with 100 wagons, is in full retreat toward Bloemfontein, hotly pursued by Gen. Gelly-Kenny. It will probably be a rear guard fight all the way. Our cavalry is in pursuit from Kimberley."

WAGES CANNOT BE TOUCHED.

Chicago Court Decides Creditor Can Only Take Defendant's Ready Money.

Chicago, Feb. 20.—Judge Clifford, of the United States district court, decided that the wages after the filing of a creditor's bill cannot be reached by the bill. In deciding the case Judge Clifford said: "The plaintiff can only get what the defendant has at the time of filing the bill. At law such accrued wages cannot be reached by garnishment proceedings, and the analogy holds in equity in the case of a creditor's bill." The point has never before been contested in this court.

CANADIANS GET A CHANCE.

Men From the Dominion Distinguish Themselves in South Africa.

Montreal, Feb. 20.—A cable dispatch to the Star, dated Jacobsdal, Feb. 15, says the Royal Canadian regiment was given a show in the operations which have resulted in the occupation of Jacobsdal by the British forces. The Canadians were in the Ninth division and participated in an attack on Waterfaal. In the advance from Wagedraai six Canadians fell out and are either in the hospital or captured.

Spain has nobly vindicated in honor and wisdom in deciding to renew and maintain the treaty relationships which subsisted between that country and the United States before the war. Spain means, that is to say, to make the best of its altered circumstances, turning its face toward the light instead of sulking in the shadows. "From the frying pan into the fire" is one of Spain's own proverbs, which happily it does not intend to adopt as its rule of conduct.

The Puerto Rican problem presents some difficulties. Under the colonial system of Spain, the islanders enjoyed certain commercial privileges, in sending their products to Spanish markets, which they have now lost without receiving any compensating advantage from their connection with this country. The result has been great poverty and distress. If the products of Puerto Rico were to be admitted to our great markets free of duty, it would please the islanders, but displease many of the tobacco and the sugar-raisers who are afraid of this competition. In these circumstances the proposal has been made in Congress to levy upon Puerto Rico goods one-half of the regular rates of duty. Whether Congress has a right to levy upon them any duty is a much disputed constitutional question.

The Brazilian minister to the United States has been endeavoring to encourage the importation into this country of Yerba mate or Paraguay tea, to take the place to some extent of Chinese tea. Yerba Mate is a stimulant used generally throughout South American countries. Most Americans who visit Southern countries become fond of the drink, though it seems doubtful if it will ever take the place of tea in this country. Our consul-general at Rio Janeiro in a report to the state department recommends its use, however, as an excellent stimulant and nerve tonic. "It is pre-eminently a temperance drink," he says, "and the temperance societies in the United States could do a very useful work by helping to popularize it. Yerba mate, has all the stimulating and sustaining qualities of Chinese tea or of coffee, without the detrimental effect caused by their constant and excessive use—affection of liver and kidneys, irritation of the nervous system, etc.—and it is very cheap. The great masses in Uruguay and Argentine, including the famous gauchos (cowboys) of the pampas, who drink it constantly instead of water, tea or coffee, hardly ever use alcoholic stimulants. Intoxication is a rare occurrence there.

There are now, according to the war department's report, 10,343,152 American citizens eligible for military duty. These figures, coupled with the widespread knowledge of American prowess diffused during the recent Spanish war, are enough to make embattled Europe think twice and crawl into a cavernous hole before attempting such an undertaking as combat with the giant of the new world.

Puerto Rico's census gives a total of 975,000 persons, a density of population equal to that of Massachusetts. Cuba has but a third more population, though twelve times as large in area.

HOW THE CUBAN CENSUS IS TAKEN.

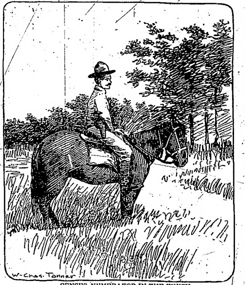
Ask any Cuban today what enterprise of the American government in Cuba has the most significance and importance and he will answer without a moment's hesitation:

"The census."

In the United States a census is only an incident of the national life, the results of which are to be looked for with mild curiosity. In Cuba the present census, the enumerations for which were completed on Nov. 30, is regarded as the formation step in the future government of the island. Upon its population totals must rest the first popular election, to which the Cubans are looking forward as the children of Israel looked to the promised land. It is a foregone conclusion that there must be certain franchise qualifications—as to illiteracy, residence, nationality. The census will definitely settle the proportions of population, Spaniards, Cubans, negroes, Americans and other foreigners, it will establish the very important percentage of illiteracy, hitherto only dimly estimated, and in case a constitutional convention or a representative assembly is chosen it will decide the ratio of representation from each province and city. Unpleasant as it may be to the pride of the American, it must be confessed that the Cubans have looked upon the improvements in paving, sewerage and police, on the courts and the customs' service with absolute lack of interest, if not with actual hostility. They were all right enough in their way, but they were not what the Cubans had been fighting for, and who cared for a little dirt or a little customs tipping, anyway? It is the government that the Cuban is anxious to manage, and the census is the first indication that there is going to be an opportunity for him to try it. As a consequence, the work of the enumerators, of whom there are 1,600 in Cuba, was looked upon with extraordinary interest and solicitude. In the first place, every Cuban wanted his name in the rolls and if the enumerator did not call promptly he complained to the supervisor and demanded prompt attention. And then, when the enumerator finally did call upon him, he gloated over the questions and yet looked upon them with characteristic Cuban suspicion and tried to see which of them had been set by "los Americanos" as a trap. Also the customary census notices, pasted on the walls of his house and providing fines or imprisonment for fraudulent answers to the questions, worried him, and sometimes he came up through the mud and rain, a score of miles on his burro to explain that he was innocent.

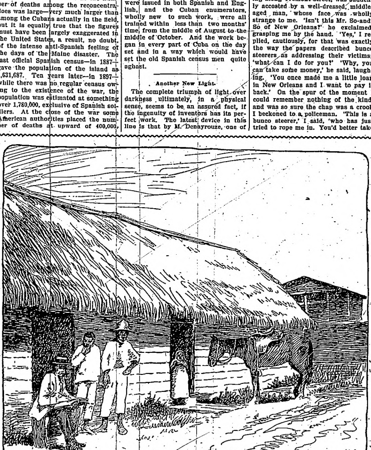
The census is going to reveal some interesting facts when the blanks are finally tabulated at Washington. Immediately before the Spanish-American war the newspapers were filled with harrowing stories as to the death by starvation, disease and ill-treatment of hundreds of thousands of reconcentradoes, as well as of the poor of the cities. From what I could gather in an extended trip through Cuba, during which I saw and talked with many of the enumerators who were then busy with their work, the population will be found much larger than estimated at the close of the war. There can be no doubt that the number of deaths among the reconcentradoes was large—very much larger than among the Cubans actually in the field, but it is equally true that the figures must have been largely exaggerated in the United States, a result, no doubt, of the intense anti-Spanish feeling of the days of the Maine disaster. The last official Spanish census—in 1887—gave the population of the island as 1,631,687. Ten years later—in 1897—while there was no regular census owing to the existence of the war, the population was estimated at something over 1,780,000, exclusive of Spanish soldiers. At the close of the war some American authorities placed the number of deaths at upward of 400,000, which would mean a present population of approximately 1,380,000. Other pessimistic prophets believe the census will show barely 1,200,000, but so good a judge as Major-General Wilson, governor of Matanzas and Santa Clara, who has been keeping a close watch on the census, thinks it will show a total of more than 1,500,000.

Never before was there such a census in Cuba. The old Spaniards had their regular census years, but their methods of making the enumeration were quite characteristic. A grand supervisor with an army of Spanish clerks sat in Havana and drew large salaries. There were also traveling enumerators who left blanks at certain stores in each block of the towns and cities or with certain magistrates or storekeepers in the country. Here the questions were filled in for the whole neighborhood, hit or miss, or not at all, and the blanks were then forwaded to Havana, and the statistics were completed as soon as the census appropriation gave out. As a result the Spanish census was absolutely unreliable, some districts, particularly in the country, being wholly unenumerated.



CENSUS NUMERATOR IN THE FINISH.

The American census has been conducted on strictly business principles, under the supervision of the war department. By direction of the president, General J. P. Sanger was appointed director of the census with his headquarters in Washington, and Victor H. Olmstead, an experienced census expert and statistician, was appointed assistant director with headquarters at Santa Clara, Cuba. Upon Mr. Olmstead devolved the task of local organization, the appointment of enumerators and the decision of the thousand and one delicate questions connected with the work. These appointments were made in August of last year, and the census was to begin on October 16th and to be completed, so far as the enumeration went, by November 30th—in six weeks. The blanks were devised and translated into Spanish, all the rules and orders were issued in both Spanish and English, and the Cuban enumerators, wholly new to such work, were all trained within less than two months' time, from the middle of August to the middle of October. And the work began in every part of Cuba on the day set and in a way which would have set the old Spanish census men quite aghast.



CUBAN CENSUS ENUMERATORS AT WORK.

Another New Light.

The complete triumph of light over darkness ultimately, in a physical sense, seems to be an assured fact, if the ingenuity of inventors has its perfect work. The latest device in this line is that by M. Dennyrouze, one of the leading spirits in the introduction and application of the incandescent gas and oil lighting systems now in general use, who has lately explained to the French Society of Civil Engineers a system of incandescent lighting in which alcohol furnishes the heating flame. While, as is well known, alcohol under a Welsbach mantle produces a brilliant flame, it is not an economical one, but M. Dennyrouze's plan is to charge the alcohol with hydro-carbons, in solutions, to such an extent that the carbon in the flame and deposited on the mantle adds greatly to the light without causing any increased consumption of alcohol. It is asserted that this system offers many advantages for portable lighting plants, such as railway carriages, etc.

REASONABLE SUSPICION.

Thought the Bank Vice-President Was a Bunco Man.

"During the occupation of New Orleans by the federals," said an old citizen in a story-telling humor, according to the New Orleans Times-Democrat, "I made the acquaintance of a very agreeable Massachusetts man who was not in the army, but who was an intimate friend of Gen. Butler. One day he hunted me up and asked, without much preface, for a loan of $600. I couldn't well spare the money, but through motives of policy I let him have it. He went away, promising to return the money within a certain time, and, as I anticipated, I heard nothing further from him. Now, under ordinary circumstances," continued the old citizen, "$600 was not a sum I was apt to forget, but I had regarded the loan as lost from the outset, and in the troublous times that followed the incident passed completely out of my mind. For over a dozen years I don't believe I ever recalled it once. In 1878 or thereabouts—I forget the exact date—I had occasion to go to Boston, and while walking along Tremont street, was suddenly accosted by a well-dressed, middle-aged man, whose face was wholly strange to me. 'Isn't this Mr. So-and-So of New Orleans?' he exclaimed, grasping me by the hand. 'Yes,' I replied, cautiously, for that was exactly the way the papers described bunco steerers as addressing their victims; 'what can I do for you?' 'Why, you can take some money,' he said, laughing. 'You once made me a little loan in New Orleans and I want to pay it back.' On the spur of the moment I could remember nothing of the kind, and was so sure the chap was a crook I beckoned to a policeman. 'This is a bunco steerer,' I said, 'who has just tried to rope me in. You'd better take care of him.' 'All right,' replied the officer, 'but you'll have to come to the station with us to prefer the charge.' To my surprise the man made no protest, and we started off, followed by a considerable crowd. Two blocks below our prisoner stopped before a fine building. 'I am vice president of this bank,' he said, quietly; 'suppose we step in for a moment.' Well, sir, it was true, and you never saw two such sheepish-looking fellows as that Boston copper and yours truly. The other man laughed until he got tired, and then recalled to my mind the episode of the $600 loan, after which he wrote me a check for principal and interest to date. He is still alive and prospering, by the way, and I see him almost every time I go north. He likes to introduce me as the man he tried to bunco."

WHAT HE SAW ON THE COFFIN.

An Expressman's Story About Carrying a Corpse on the Front Platform.

"I do not believe in ghosts, nor am I particularly nervous," remarked the express messenger, "but I once was so positive that I saw a spectre that I was troubled with insomnia for many nights, and I thought I never would be able to quiet my nerves again. It was back in the '80s, and I was running between Kansas City and Denver on the U. P. We made a small Colorado station one evening about dusk and found on the platform, as I had been advised, the grewsome pine box, telling its story of some unfortunate who had gone to the mountains in a vain search for health. It so happened that my car was full, and plan as I might I could find no place for the box. The train conductor came up to find out what was the cause of the delay. I told him of my predicament. He was equal to the emergency in an instant. 'Put it on the front platform,' he said. The suggestion was a good one, and in another moment our dead passenger was aboard and we were rolling over the prairie. It so happened that I had a car with a door at the end. About 10 o'clock snow began falling, and I tell you it came down thick, as it often does in Colorado. It was midnight when I thought of the corpse. It would never do to lose it, and the jolt of the train might jar it off the platform. The night was clear. I opened the door. As it swung on its hinges I looked out. Then I slammed the door with a bang and jumped back in the car. I was perspiring from every pore and trembling like a leaf. What had I seen? Why, sitting bolt upright on the coffin, with his hands clasping his knees, was the whitest ghost any man ever saw. I stood in the center of the car irresolute. I looked at my Winchester, then I realized it would be of no use against a spook. Suddenly the door opened, and there stood my ghost. It was a tramp covered with snow from head to foot. He stood there blinking at the light for a moment, and then said: 'Say, Willie, you've ketched me, anyhow; can't you let me get warm afore you turn me off?' Did I let him ride? Well, I guess. If I'd been going to New York, he could have gone with me. I'm the last man in the world not to show appreciation and gratitude."—Minneapolis Tribune.

READY WIT.

Saved a Western Congressman from Curtain Lecture.

In the seclusion of the house cloakrooms a story is being told on a western member. There are 357 men in the house. Three hundred and fifty-six are hereby released from any connection with the story. The other man—and the other man's wife—will recognize the truth of what is here recorded: The western member went home at a very early hour in the morning. He had made a night of it with some friends. He knew that his conduct would be considered reprehensible by his better half, and so, as he ascended the steps of his modest home, he racked his brain for some plan to avert the lady's wrath. As he entered the hall he saw an umbrella. Instantly it occurred to him that the umbrella might be his salvation. He carried the umbrella upstairs. Seating himself on a chair in the corner of the bedroom, he raised the rain guard over his head, and then he coughed loudly. His wife awoke and saw in the dim gaslight her liege lord sitting solemnly under the raised umbrella. "What are you doing?" she asked, in natural surprise. "It is 3 o'clock, my dear," said he, "and I am waiting for the storm." The congressman's ready wit saved him from a Caudle lecture. He is worrying now, however, to find an equally effective act for the next time he stays out late.—Washington Post.

Tit for Tat.

A former commodore-captain of a famous transatlantic line, while friendly and polite to his passengers below, was very much the reverse if approached when on duty. As he happened to be on deck one fine afternoon, a lady, quite unaware of his peculiarity, accosting him on some trifling query as to the probable duration of the favorable weather, was both surprised and indignant to get curtly answered: "Don't know, ma'am—don't know. Better go and ask the cook." The lady, though taken somewhat aback, was quite equal to the occasion, and rejoined: "Oh! I beg a thousand pardons. Excuse me, pray. I thought I was addressing the cook!"—Collier's Weekly.

His Character.

The old hiring fairs are still held in some rural districts of England. There is a story of an old Gloucestershire farmer, who, seeing a likely lad at such a place, opened negotiations with a view to engaging him. "Hast got a character from thy last place?" the farmer asked. "No," replied the boy, "but my old gaffer be about somewhere, and I can get he to write one." "Very well," was the reply. "Thee get it and meet I here again at 4 o'clock." The farmer and the boy met at the appointed hour. "Hast got thy character?" was the query. The answer was short and sharp: "No, but I ha' got thine, and I bean't a-coming."

The Business View.

Two newsboys witnessed a performance of "Hamlet." In the last scenes, after Hamlet has killed Laertes and the king, and the queen has died of poison and Hamlet of a poisonous wound, one of the boys exclaimed: "Say, Jim, what a great time that must have been for extra editions."

HOW BOERS FIGHT.

AN ENGLISHMAN'S COMMENTS ON PRESENT WAR.

Millionaire Mine Owner of South Africa Pays the Usual High Tribute to the Farmer Republicans — Served with Them in Basuto War.

J. B. Robinson, a millionaire mine owner of South Africa, who fought side by side with the Boers in the Basuto war, comments interestingly on the present campaign. As an example of what Boers can do in the way of holding a strong position by dint of courage and markmanship, Mr. Robinson gives an experience of his own in the Basuto war. Potgieter was out with a scouting party of thirty men, and found himself between two large parties of Kaffirs. Four of the little commando tried to get away, trusting to their well-bred horses, but only one got through, and he could not make his way to the laager to give warning. Potgieter and the remaining twenty-six men galloped for a small ridge, and, getting there in time, at once started throwing up stones in a semicircle to form a rampart of defense. Mr. Robinson goes on:

"They had only raised the rampart two feet high when the Kaffirs were on them. Potgieter quickly issued his orders. 'No one is to fire until after me,' the leader said; 'I will bring down the chiefs, so many of you are to fire at the horses, and the remainder are to shoot down the dismounted men when they get on their feet.' All the Kaffirs were mounted, and they rode up to the little band in apparently irresistible numbers, the chiefs, gay with their war plumes and heavy with Kaffir beer at their head. The first body that had been sighted consisted of between 400 and 500 men, and a second strong force was afterward discovered in the rear. Potgieter let them approach to within seventy yards and then fired. Down fell chief after chief. The rifles of his men rang out, and all the horses of the leading men stumbled, shot through the breasts. The fire was so resistless that the charging party edged off to the right and then the left, and made a circle in retreat. Again the Kaffirs came on. They were armed with rifles. The fight started at 8 o'clock in the morning. By 2 o'clock five or six of the Boers were so exhausted they declared they could do no more. Their mouths were parched, their tongues were swollen with intolerable thirst. Their arms ached so that they could hardly move them, and they were stiff in every limb. They said: 'We cannot fight any longer,' but he laughed at them. 'Put two pebbles in your mouths,' he said, 'that will lessen your thirst. If you cannot fire any more let me have your guns. You keep them loaded, and I will do the shooting. We must fight or die; there is no escape.' And so he heartened them. The fighting kept on till 6 o'clock in the evening and then the Kaffirs drew off.

"Perhaps this incident will help you to realize what kind of fighters the men of South Africa are. Yet against such men our generals have blindly hurled their infantry, to be shot down like sheep. The madness of it! To see so much courage in our British troops thrown away, and for nothing at all. We do the Boers no damage. Up to now their losses have been infinitesimal.

"The British soldiers are too dependent on their commissariat, too slow. A Boer commando, the men armed with their rifles alone, will take with it sufficient food for four or five days, each man carrying his own provisions in saddlebags. In that four or five days the commando can with ease cover 150 miles, a distance that infantry would require from twelve to fifteen days to cover. This Boer war will lead to the revolutionizing of European military methods, and the hope of its speedy end is the liberal use of properly selected irregular horse."

CALLED HIM DOWN.

But One Little Circumstance Made It a Waste of Words.

Jones was staying at home for a day's rest, and Mrs. Jones thought she might as well make him useful. "I wish you would go to the back door," she said, "and, if that's the grocer knocking, I wish you'd tell him that I've sent down for that soap three times already, and if it doesn't come today I shall go to the store myself and complain." "There's no use in wasting words, Mary," said Jones, briskly. "I know how to bring such people to time. I'll attend to the man so that you'll have no more trouble." He went to the back door and confronted the man with a pleasant but firm expression on his countenance. "Now look here!" he said with decision. "This thing has been going on long enough. Mrs. Jones can't afford to await your pleasure in the matter of soap or anything else. This delay has caused her much annoyance, and it is entirely inexcusable on your part. It isn't possible that an establishment like the one for which you work shouldn't be provided with soap enough for all its customers. I see plainly that the fault lies with you; you've neglected to give the order. Now, I've only one thing to say—if our trade isn't worth your employer's while, we'll go somewhere else. I'm a man of few words! Unless the soap comes this morning, Mrs. Jones will order from Smith & Brown in the future." The man looked confused, but said nothing, while Jones paused for breath. "Come, come," said Jones, "have you any excuse to offer—any reason to give for your failure to bring this soap?" "I don't know as I have, sir," said the man slowly, "except that I'm the milkman, and I've come to collect this little bill for the month of December."

SURPRISED THE GIRLS.

Their Reception at Dawson After a Discouraging Journey.

"Nothing queerer or quainter ever happened in Dawson City than the reception of the schoolma'ams," said Mr. L. D. Carl, the Klondike miner, who spent a day in New Orleans recently. "You see, in the spring of '97 a lot of young women, mostly from west Oregon, banded together to go to Dawson, attracted by the stories of big wages. They were nice girls, all of them, who had been earning their living as clerks, stenographers, bookkeepers, seamstresses, school teachers and so on, and they had enough good American pluck to believe they could make their way in any temperature. As bad luck would have it, however, they got snowbound at Lake Bennett, and were tied up there for over two months. That exhausted their money and enthusiasm, and when they finally set out for the Yukon they were as homesick and hopeless and generally dejected a crowd as you ever saw. Meanwhile the report reached Dawson that a party of twenty-five beautiful schoolma'ams would arrive by the next boat, and great excitement prevailed. There was no school there at the time, but it was instantly agreed that several would be put up, if necessary, to give the strangers occupation. 'What we need,' said one of the speakers at a public meeting, 'is the society of real ladies to give tone to the town, and we must keep 'em here, regardless of expense.' This met general approval, and arrangements were made for an elaborate reception and banquet, the tough element being put on notice that the slightest disturbance might bring on a lynching. The boat arrived about dusk, and the poor, despondent girls were amazed at the appearance of a reception committee, who greeted them with profound bows, and escorted them to a gorgeously decorated supper room, with a brass band tooting in the background. They were informed by the spokesman that Dawson was honored by their presence, and while the town was temporarily short on schools, that defect would be promptly remedied. In the interim they were to consider themselves guests of the municipality, and quarters had been arranged for them at the best hotel. The situation gradually dawned on the dumfounded young women, and their spirits soared skyward. They explained that only two of the party were really teachers, and next day all secured good positions. Most of them did exceedingly well, and the majority eventually got married. I know several who are the wives of Yukon millionaires."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

AWKWARDNESS

Of Speaking to a Strange Person Under a Misapprehension.

It is sometimes most awkward to speak to the wrong person. "Why, there is Nellie Miller's husband!" exclaimed one of two women who were lunching at the Waldorf-Astoria the other day. "Isn't it odd how every one turns up here? I have not seen him since he carried Nellie off to his home in the west, two years ago. I must speak to him and ask how dear Nellie is!" So on her way out she made the tour of the room, and, stopping at a table where a well-dressed man was sitting alone, she said graciously: "Perhaps you do not remember me. I am Miss X. Nellie, you know, used to be one of my dearest friends. You have no idea how we grudged her to you." The man rose to his feet with a bow, looking admiringly at the pretty woman. "I wish I had a Nelly," he said, regretfully, "so that I might claim acquaintance with you. Unfortunately I am a bachelor and my name is Brown," whereupon Miss X retreated in confusion. "Harry," said his wife, as they took their seats in the dining-room of a well-known restaurant, "I am sure that woman over there is Mme. Melba. I met her in Paris, and I am going to speak to her when we go out." The curious glances of a number of people in the neighborhood toward the supposed diva confirmed Mrs. S. in her recognition, and on their way to the door she stopped at the latter's table. "I met you at the house of Countess M, Mme. Melba," she said, "and I hope you will allow me to recall myself to your memory." "Now, isn't that funny!" exclaimed the fair stranger. "This is the third time since I have been in New York that I have been taken for that opera singer, but I'm pleased to see you all the same. Do sit down," she continued, hospitably, "and let me give you some of this chicken; it's real good, and they have given me the whole bird. I expected my husband," she proceeded volubly, not giving poor Mrs. S. a chance to retreat, "but I guess he's kept downtown." Here she paused breathless, and Mrs. S., seizing the chance, made her apologies and fled.—New York Tribune.

Incredulous.

A country rector was showing a party of his parishioners over the rectory, when they came to a small room full of curios. Pointing to a armlet of dull gold, the clergyman said: "That ornament was found in a tomb in Mexico, Central America. The tomb was probably 1000 years old." An old fellow standing by fidgeted; scratched his head and then remarked: "'Scuse me, sir, they must 'ave 'ad yer. America wasn't discovered 600 year ago, let alone 1000."—Answers.

Wireless Telegraphy.

Nowhere have Signor Marconi's successful experiments with wireless telegraphy attracted more attention than in Germany, and soon after his work in this country during the international yacht races was completed the semiofficial announcement was made in Berlin that similar experiments would be made in Germany in the near future, says the New York Herald. These tests have just taken place on the steamship Prince Sigismund and on a land station, which was erected at Laboe, near the entrance of the Kiel harbor. The tests were conducted under the auspices of the German Naval Society. At the bow of the vessel a strong bronze wire was attached and then connected with an insulator. In the middle of the wire and between the masts was a net fourteen metres long, one metre broad, and with meshes of five centimetres in size. It was rolled upon a cylinder and isolated. The inductor, receiver and other paraphernalia were placed in their customary positions, while at Leboe a mast of thirty metres in height was erected and the necessary instruments were placed in the room of a neighboring house. During the first day messages were sent a distance of thirty kilometres, the vessel being the transmitting point, and the station at Laboe the receiver. Messages were then transmitted from Laboe, and, while the results were not satisfactory at first, success was constant, as soon as the distance had been reduced to twenty kilometres. On various days tests were made at different distances, the maximum being forty-five kilometres, on which occasion the messages were transmitted from Laboe and received on the vessel. The smallest distance was twenty kilometres, and the average during the entire time was thirty kilometres. The experiments at the greatest distances were made on those occasions when the transmitter was on land and the receiver on board ship. The best results were obtained at an average distance of thirty kilometres, as the instrument then worked without the slightest hitch. Atmospherical conditions, it is said, did not in any way influence the transmission or receipt of messages, and the instruments worked quite as well when there was heavy rain as when there was sunshine. On the other hand, the smoke of the vessel provided indirectly detrimental, since it blackened the isolators and to some extent prevented them from working properly. This mischief, however, was guarded against by covering them with a light coating of oil. On the whole, say those who were present, these experiments clearly show that communication by means of wireless telegraphy can surely be made for a certain distance, not only from one vessel to another, but also from land to a vessel at sea and vice versa. The conditions under which the experiments were made were not the most favorable, it is pointed out, as no steps were taken to adapt the steamer for this special work, and it is only reasonable to suppose that all the necessary alterations in the steamer must be made if successful experiments are to be carried out at a greater distance than thirty kilometres. That under proper conditions successful experiments can be made at a greater distance than thirty kilometres is the firm opinion of these German scientists who have given any attention to the subject.

Sandow's Improvement in Dumb-bells.

The improved dumb-bell, which has been patented in this country by Joseph Robinson of London, England, seems to have merit for the reason of its indorsement by Eugene Sandow, to whom the inventor has assigned his patent. This improvement consists in the application of one or more strings to the dumb-bell, so as to cause the same to require a firm grip when held in the hand. This cause is a continuous tension of the muscles of the arms, wrists, hands and fingers when in use, greatly increasing the beneficial effect derived from the use of the implements. For this purpose the bell is made in two parts and any kind of a spring introduced between them.

A Newspaper Without Print.

To print the news in a series of actual photographs is the purpose of the Stereo Revue of Paris, the latest and most ingenious invention of journalism. The reporters are sent out armed with cameras of the most approved type, and they are present at all events of even passing interest. The cameras are adapted to take double or stereopticon pictures, and on the return of them are developed and otherwise prepared, and from these a number of sets of double pictures on transparent films are printed on a single roll, which constitutes one issue of the Stereo Revue. Every subscriber receives an apparatus for viewing these pictures when he pays his first subscription, and each week he also receives an installment of the pictures.

A Substitute for Brass.

The rise in the price of brass and the demand for increased wages recently made by the brassworkers have quickened interest in England in the various substitutes for brass goods. Attention has been chiefly directed to the art of electrobrassing, which has undergone considerable development during the last year or two. Thanks to the introduction of various improved methods of electrodeposition, it is now possible to cover iron castings with a coat of brass of substantial thickness—so thick that, without close examination, it is impossible to distinguish them from similar objects of real brass. The wearing qualities produced in this way are declared to be excellent. The articles are, of course, much cheaper than if made of solid brass.

Removable Billiard Cue Tip.

The accompanying cut shows the latest effort to produce a billiard cue tip which can be easily replaced without delay or trouble. The end of the cue is recessed to receive a small lever eccentrically mounted and connected with a hooked link. This latter extends through the center of the cue to the end. The cork tip is mounted on a shank by which it is secured to the hook on the end of the link, and when the lever is drawn back it holds this tip securely in place. This device has been patented by an inventor of Sayville, N. Y.

A Proof of the Germ Theory.

Fifty years ago the inhabitants of Mentone (in the south of France) and neighborhood were a healthy, happy race of splendid physique, to whom consumption was absolutely unknown. Then Mentone became the Mecca of the consumptive. The peasants left their farms and their healthy lives to wait on the wealthy invalids. Farmers' wives and daughters became washerwomen, constantly handling clothes impregnated with the germs of consumption. Thousands of consumptives died there, impregnating the soil and the water with the germs of their disease. As a result, the earth, air and water of Mentone are infested with the tubercle bacillus, and the once healthy peasantry are consumptives almost to a man and a woman. No more complete or startling proof of the truth of the once derided germ theory of disease could well be imagined than this.

Sir W. H. Preece on Sanitation.

In his inaugural address to the Sanitary Institute the President, Sir W. Preece, declared Moses, the greatest sanitary engineer who ever lived, tried to insure pure air, pure water, pure food, pure soil, pure dwellings and pure bodies. On the question of water supply he said it was by no means an ascertained fact that absolutely pure water was far the best for dietetic purposes. Good drinking water, he said, should not contain more than twenty bacteria per cubic centimeter. In most towns in Britain twenty-five gallons per day for each person was generally sufficient, but in New York the amount required was sixty and in Philadelphia ninety gallons per head. He further stated that Edinburg, by spending $2,800,000 on building new houses for the poorer classes, had reduced its death rate from 28 to 17.

Extension-desk telephones are constantly growing in favor. They save the annoyance and the delay of having to rise and go to a general office telephone. As the message comes over the general telephone line, the business man having the extension-desk telephone can answer the call or not as he may see fit.

Yukon telegraph lines cost about $137,000. The distance from Lake Bennett to Dawson is 740 miles. There were no horses engaged in carrying on the work of construction, most of the carrying being done by scows on the river. Four hundred dollars was taken in for messages on the first evening the lines were opened.

Recently the Philadelphia & Reading road installed a novel method of ventilating several of the smoking cars. It consists of three two-bladed vanes suspended from the top of the ventilators and operated by a small motor actuated by wind created by the motion of the train. The result is a continuous circulation of air, and the smoke and bad air are taken out through the ventilators. The fans may be disconnected when desired.

There is a little insect found in New Caledonia, called the "insect which counts," and which seems capable of counting to at least six. It is found on the leaves of the banana tree, and when the moment is favorable it may be seen to turn around, with its head as a center, describing rapid circles. At first it executes six of them, not one more nor one less, then it reverses the movement and makes the same number in an opposite direction. It stops a moment and begins again, but makes only five this time, always alternately in opposite directions. Another stop, then double rotation in alternate ways, the turns this time being only four, and so on, diminishing constantly in such a way to successively three, then two and at last one single turn. After these gymnastic exercises, which are at the same time mathematical, the insect remains absolutely motionless until it gives itself up again to its complicated calculations with an exactitude which many people might envy.

SECRET SERVICE AMONG THE BOERS

The South African war has shown one thing in which the Boer is superior to the English and that thing is secret service. As a spy the Boer of the Transvaal has no equal, as the English have found to their cost.

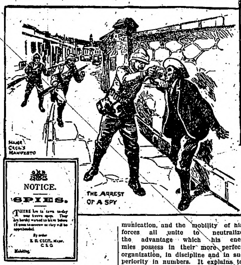
Since the opening of hostilities there has scarcely been a move made on the part of the British that did not seem to be fully anticipated by the Boers. In fact, the different signal defeats which have befallen British arms during the South African campaign may be attributed to the efficiency of the Boer secret service.

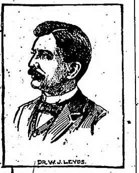
Oom Paul and Joubert, it is well known, have spies everywhere, and owing to the peculiar conditions under which the war is being carried on, it is practically impossible for the British authorities to put a stop to the leaking out of information. The present situation in South Africa is something like that in the Philippines. Officers find it difficult to determine just who are friendlies and just who are to be counted among the enemy. How many spies, for instance, there may be among the supposedly disaffected burghers of the cape it is impossible to tell. This peculiar position of affairs forced General Gatacre not long ago to issue a proclamation that any Cape Colony burgher traveling from town to town would be arrested on suspicion. He forbade them to go to market towns oftener than once a week. This was obviously to prevent the dissemination of information regarding the movement and disposition of the British forces.

In the town of Mafeking, too, early in the war, Major Cecil was forced to post up notices to the effect that information had reached him that spies were operating in the town and that unless the same left Mafeking by noon of the following day they would be apprehended and punished according to the law governing all such cases.

The startling number of times the British forces have been led into ambuscades or have marched unsuspecting against a Boer force thoroughly prepared to meet them has naturally given her majesty's officers a very disagreeable consciousness that their movements were only too well known by the enemy. In fact, it is known that Cape Town itself is full of Boer spies, yet no effective move can be made toward stopping their operations. The knowledge which the Boer possesses of the country, his well guarded means of secret communication, and the mobility of his forces all unite to neutralize the advantage which his enemies possess in their more perfect organization, in discipline and in superiority in numbers. It explains to a great degree just why the little republics of South Africa have been able to make such an excellent showing when facing the most powerful and the most aggressive empire in existence at the present day.

While the Boer is by no means a diplomat, he is in state and in municipal affairs always a wily and foxy schemer. This perhaps explains just why the secret service system of the Transvaal is the most extensive and the most effective affair of its kind in existence. When it is remembered that the "simple minded veldt burgher" has such an adroit and experienced secret service agent on the continent as Dr. Leyds and it is borne in mind that this official receives a salary of $80,000 a year for his services, some idea of the faith which Oom Paul places in his spy system may be secured. Dr. Leyds goes about under the official but delightfully ambiguous title of "European representative of the Transvaal." It is said, indeed, that some of the most influential continental newspapers have been subsidized by the Transvaal government through the wily Dr. Leyds, and it is known that he approached Lisbon over and over again on the matter of the purchase of Delogoa Bay, but could not succeed in shaking Portugal's friendship for Great Britain. It is a recognized fact that Leyds, by some means or other, has found it possible to obtain audiences with European rulers unwarranted by his own official importance or the importance of the government which he represents. But





DR. W. J. LEYDS.

It is rumored that this same government instructs its European agent to scatter his gold lavishly when once he has ascertained where such gold will do the most good. It is worth while noting that the "special" expenditure, as such funds are termed, of the Transvaal government has amounted to $11,435,000 during the last fourteen years. This goes to show that the secret service of even such a small republic as the Transvaal is no insignificant affair.

WHY HUMAN BEINGS LAUGH.

Cachination Is a Faculty We Acquire with Increase of Intelligence.

Anthropologists say that the ability to laugh comes to the child as it grows older. The first smile is observed when the child is about 40 to 60 days old, but it does not begin to laugh until some time after that. According to Mantegazza and others the power of laughing has to be acquired, just as a child learns how to talk or walk. Laughter is observed at the earliest only after they are 3 months old. Children and women laugh more than men, not because the cares of life lie less heavily upon them, but because the former are more excitable, and because the moderating power of the cerebral hemisphere is less in them than among men generally. Profound study makes men serious, and so foolish people are sometimes noted for laughing immoderately. Yet laughter is not so much an index to intelligence as it is to the condition of health. Healthy, vigorous people are of proverbially good-humored, joyous, laughing natures, while the "sallow, gloomy-eyed dyspeptic" is a description scientifically accurate, although it has its origin from the brain of a poet. The envious, wicked and malevolent rarely laugh, because, phrenologists say, they are impregnated with bile, and are therefore morose. The haughty, the vain and the awkward also laugh very little for fear of losing their dignity. The Spanish people, who are proverbially grave, are a good example. People who have lines extending downward from the angle of the mouth toward the chin well marked rarely laugh, and, moreover, show a tendency to pensiveness in youth and melancholy in after life. Those who have lines raying outward from the eyes are, on the contrary, people who laugh a good deal, especially when the upper lip is framed by two deep furows running down to the mouth. Lavater, the noted physiognomist, states that a frank, easy, copious laughter indicates 'a good soul devoid of vanity." Such people often have a great many wrinkles running obliquely outward and downward from the eyes. They also have full, open lips and a round, large forehead.—New York Herald.

Wished He Was Jones.

One of the applicants for a consulate in Japan while James G. Blaine was secretary of state was the late Samuel Kimberley of Baltimore, who died in the service in Central America, says the Chicago News. After he had presented his credentials, Mr. Blaine said: "I should like to appoint you, Mr. Kimberley, but I have made it a rule to recommend no one who does not speak the language of the country to which he is sent. Do you speak Japanese?" "Certainly, Mr. Blaine," said Mr. Kimberley. "Ask me something in Japanese, and I'll answer you." Mr. Blaine had not a word to say, but the Japanese post went to another man, all the same, and Kimberley went to Central America. One day Kimberley met a young woman, who threw her arms impulsively around his neck and kissed him. Seeing her mistake, she drew back and angrily asked: "Aren't you Mr. Jones?" "No, madam," replied Kimberley, bowing, "I'm not, but I wish to thunder I was."

She Is Not Clever.

A woman who entertains a great deal tells a writer in Harper's Bazar that she is heart, brain, nerve and soul weary of clever people, and she longs to know somebody who neither writes, sings, recites, toots, fiddles, nor even has ideas. She even proposes a toast to the stupid people who do not intrude, and those who, while not stupid, often pretend they are, for the sake of the quiet and peace they know you will appreciate. Cleverness runs in families nowadays. Even the household baby is hauled out at deadly night hours to do his little turn, and the grandmother of the family is clever. Ah, a rare and satisfying person to meet is the family woman who is not clever, who makes no pretensions to cleverness, who has not prepared a paper on any of the burning questions of the hour.

OVERINDULGED CHILDREN.

Truth Which is Worth the Attention of American Parents.

John Ruskin, at 75, had as keen a sense of taste as most men have at 20, and greatly enjoyed new flavors, says the Youth's Companion. "My palate," he once said, "serves me now so well, because when I was a child I was given only the plainest food. When I was a boy, too, I had but one or two toys and no amusements. Hence the keen delight which I take now in every little pleasure." M. Renan explained to a friend his habitual cheerfulness in the same way. "When I was young," he said, "my life was simple and bare. I had few amusements. I kept all my illusions; hence little things, which an indulged child in a luxurious home would scarcely notice, now give me—an old man—real happiness." Here is the hint of a truth worth the attention of American parents. If they have wealth, or even a moderate income, their fond effort usually is to give to their boys and girls all the pleasures in miniature which belong to middle age. Children are early made familiar with the idea of fashionable clothes and jewelry. They have their formal luncheons and dinner parties, and even balls, in which there are the state and ceremony, and sometimes the dishes, which are to be found in the entertainments of adults. They are overloaded with costly toys, for which they care little. The disappointed father and mother wonder why the child is bored by new pleasures. They do not see that they are robbing him in youth of the relish and keen sense of enjoyment which was meant to give zest and happiness to his whole life. Still more cruel kindness is that of parents of moderate means, who accustom their children to a life of luxury, living to the full limit of their incomes, and when they die leave them unprepared to struggle with the world.

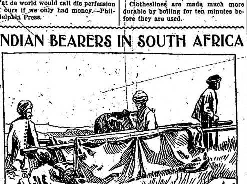
INDIAN BEARERS IN SOUTH AFRICA



When the British empire is at war, as might be said of that empire during the present time, the war office is able to call upon subjects from all corners of the earth. Canadians, Australians, Irishmen, East Indians—all are ready to respond to the call of the homeland, and curious indeed are some of the forces which go to the front under the union jack. Perhaps the most outlandish element in this motley army are the Indian bearers who did such good work at and after the battle of Reitfontein. Although acting only in the capacity of nurses and camp followers, these experienced and intrepid gatherers of the wounded were the means of saving many a Britisher's life by the dispatch and thoroughness with which they went over the battlefield and carried the wounded to places of safety, where surgeons and stimulants were awaiting them.

"The penknife treats me very ill,
  It cuts me in the street,
And really is extremely sharp
  Whene'er we chance to meet.

"And when I broke the other day
  Beneath its bitter stroke,
It said 'it didn't see the point,'

The Life of Tennyson.

[As told by herself.]

I am going to tell you my history, but before I go any further I will tell you that I am a cat, for you might not know it if I did not tell you. Before I opened my eyes I heard some one say, "We will have to drown these kittens; we cannot keep so many." That made my blood run cold. I knew but little about the water, and I had a perfect horror of it, but still I hoped the people would change their minds. One day a girl came down and said that her sister had said if they would not drown us she would take all six of us. That made me feel a little better, so I slept as soundly as a healthy kitten could sleep. And one day I opened my eyes and saw what was to be my home. One day the people moved away and took us with them. I was afraid the little girl that wanted us would not come, and we would be drowned. But one day she came and got me, but did not take any of my brothers and sisters. I heard one of the people say they wanted the rest of the kittens. So I had to go alone. I thought I would be lonesome, but when we got to my new home there were two or three other cats. The little girl's mamma came out to see me, and they tried to think of a name that would suit me, but they could not, so when my mistress' big sister came home she said to name me Lord Alfred Tennyson, but her other sister wanted my name to be Dwight Moody. But every one but her calls me Tennyson. Sometimes my mistress has company, but among all her friends I like the one she calls Bettie the best. I like her almost as well as I do my own mistress. I have a very pleasant home. I have three children now. They are not as big as I am, though. So this is my history as far as I can remember.

Mind Your Manners.

A very successful business man was telling me of the number of young people he had met with in his career, and he said that the successful man or boy had always something attractive in his manner. "It might be a kindly disposition, or the result of good breeding, but if a boy was to succeed in the present day he had to be thoughtful of the feelings of others, and very tactful in his bearing. Nothing," he said, "would more certainly ruin a lad's career than the critical disposition. If a boy came into the office and began to criticise everything he saw, and was cold with the clients, he was destined to failure from the beginning." I had often noticed this myself, but was very much impressed with the decided opinions of this man with a very large knowledge of the world of business. We might say of success in life what Demosthenes said of oratory when he was asked what was the secret of successful oratory: "First, action; second, action; third, action." So, first, manner; second, manner; third, manner. A friendly, courteous manner attracts people. They want to be made to feel comfortable—"at home," as it is called—even in a store or an office. There is a store in the neighborhood of my home that I avoid as much as I can, for no other reason than that the clerk makes me feel mean and uncomfortable every time I go in. The goods are all right, the prices are reasonable, and the location is convenient. But I find that I am not the only person who has been made to feel mean and uncomfortable in that store, and so I can say with truth the owner of that place of business loses many dollars a year from the bad manners of his clerk.—Young People's Weekly.

Girls Not Liked in Korea.

When a girl is born in Korea she is not even dignified by a name. Several names are written on slips of paper and placed in an urn before some favorite deity, and when it is necessary her godfather selects one without seeing it, and she is known by it until she reaches womanhood among the members of her own family. Strangers designate her as the wife, mother sister or daughter of such or such a man. This is not merely the result of custom. The laws are strict in this matter, and hold a woman of little more consequence than a domestic animla. In the higher classes of society the girls are separated from the boys of the family at the age of 7 years. They occupy the apartments of women and are forbidden to communicate with anyone outside.

Stone of Gratitude.

The topaz is called the stone of gratitude, and the old Roman books record the following legend from which the stone derives this attribute: The blind emperor Theodosius used to hang a brazen gong before his palace gates, and sit beside it on certain days, hearing and putting to right the grievances of any of his subjects. Those who wished for his advice and help had but to sound the gong, and immediately admission into the presence of Caesar was obtained. One day a great snake crept up to the gate and struck the brazen gong with her coils, and Theodosius gave orders that no one should molest the creature, and bade her tell him her wish. The snake bent her crest slowly in homage and straightway told the following tale: Her nest was at the base of the gateway tower, and while she had gone to find food for her young brood a strange beast, covered with sharp needles, had invaded her home, killed her nestlings, and now held possession of the little dwelling. Would Caesar grant her justice? The emperor gave orders for the porcupine to be slain and the mother to be restored to her desolate nest. Night fell, and the sleeping world had forgotten the emperor's kindly deed, but with the early dawn a great serpent glided into the palace, up the steps into the royal chamber, and laid upon each of the emperor's closed eyelids a gleaming topaz. When Emperor Theodosius awoke he found he was no longer blind, for the mother snake had paid her debt of gratitude.

A Faithful Dog.

Last winter a party of prospectors were camped on the Valdes, one of Alaska's great glaciers. Day after day they had worked their way forward, death disputing every foot with them, until it was decided that the main party should remain in camp, and two of their number, accompanied only by a dog, should endeavor to find a trail which would lead them from the glacier. For days the two men wandered, until nature succumbed and they lay down, weary and exhausted. Their faithful companion clung to them, and the warmth of his body was grateful, as they crouched low, with the bitter ice-laden wind howling about them. Their scanty stock of provisions was well-nigh exhausted, when one of them suggested sending the dog back to camp. This was a forlorn hope, but their only one. Quickly writing a few words on a leaf torn from a book, they made it fast around the dog's neck and encouraged him to start back on the trail. The sagacious animal did not appear to understand, but after repeated efforts they persuaded him to start, and he was soon swallowed up in the snow, the mist and the storm. Two days and nights passed, during which the men suffered untold agonies. On the evening of the third day, when all hope had gone and they were becoming resigned to their fate, out of the blinding and drifting snow bounded the faithful dog, and close behind him came ready hands to minister to their wants.

Had Bird Friends.

There are many instances in which an author made a pet of a bird. In Mrs. Gordon's biography of her father, there is a story told of how he found a hapless sparrow one day on the doorstep, scarcely fledged and quite unable to care for itself. He carried it into his room and cared for it, and from that day it became his protege. It became perfectly domesticated, leading a life of peace and prosperity with its kind patron for nearly eleven years. That gifted and lovable woman, Mrs. Somerville, kept herself surrounded by birds, and her fondness for them was so great that even when engaged on the most abstruse problems, she thought she could work better and with a mind more at ease if she had one of her favorites for a companion. In her letters she writes of her "dear old parrot, Lory, who is still alive and merry," and later speaks about the tamed sparrow that always sat on her arm when she wrote. She tells of the nightingales and other birds that she had rescued from dogs, and of her favorite long-tailed paroquet, Esmeralda, which lived with her many years.

Loved All Animals.

Charles Kingsley seems to have loved every living creature around him, and he taught his children to respect even the most loathsome insects. Mrs. Kingsley tells how a family of runaway toads made their home in a hole on the green bank at Eversley, and the scythe was never allowed to approach their retreat. He had two little friends in a pair of sand-wasps, which lived in a crack of the window in his drawing room, one of which he had saved from drowning in a basin of water, and every spring he would look out eargerly for them or their young, which came out of, or returned to, the same crack. He petted the white stable cat and the black house cat, and sat up with a sick dog during the last two nights of its suffering life. Wherever he went he was followed about the parish by his faithful little Dandy Dinmont, whose intelligent face was always to be seen at the lectures and school lessons, and was known to every cottager in the place, being almost as much esteemed by them as the Kingsley children, whose attached friend he was for ten years.

Noise Versus Numbers.

For those who have begun to fear that the critics may destroy the Bible utterly, and who look upon these critics as mighty in numbers, the following story is quoted. The analogy is apparent: A man with a look of business on his face came to a hotel-keeper and asked him if he would buy two car-loads of frogs' legs. "Two car-loads?" said the man, in amazement. "Why, I could not use them in twenty years!" "Well, will you buy half a car-load?" "No." "Twenty or thirty bushels?" "No." "Twenty or thirty dozens?" "No." "Two dozen?" "Yes." A few days later the man returned with three pairs of legs. "Is that all?" asked the landlord. "Yes; the fact is that I live near a pond, and the frogs made so much noise that I thought there were millions of them. But I dragged the pond with a seine, drained it and raked it, and there were only three frogs in the whole place."

Cruel.

'How can you object to my fiance? He is chivalry itself. The first time he met me he told me I was the most beautiful and most interesting girl in New York.

"And you would trust your life to a man who lies to you as shamelessly as that at the very beginning of your acquaintance!"—New York World.

The church, with all its faults, never was so intelligent, so benevolent, so consecrated as now. The church has lifted the world to a higher plane than formerly.—Rev. Dr. MacArthur.

Thought He Had Been Noticing.

Willie Wishington was trying to be conversational, but the young woman wore glasses and looked severe, and her mother surveyed the scene with an expression of austere toleration. Willie ought to have known better than to call on Monday, wash day, anyhow.

"Have you read any books lately?" asked Willie, with the inane grin which he uses in society.

"Yes," answered the girl.

"Been some pretty good ones written lately, don't you think?"

"I haven't read any recent novels," she answered.

"You ought to read some."

"I find ample entertainment in the classics," was the rejoinder, while her mother looked on with an approving smile.

"Oh, yes; Shakespeare, I suppose. He's a good old classic."

"I read Shakespeare occasionally when I read English. I also read Corneille and Moliere and Goethe and Schiller, but only for diversion. Philosophic studies are my especial occupation at present."

"By Jove!" exclaimed Willie admiringly. "You're getting to be a regular bluestocking, aren't you?"

"A what!" repeated the young woman's mother grimly as she rose to her feet.

"Why, a bluestocking, you know—that is"—

"No explanations are necessary. Amelia, I am going to tell the servant to take in the clothesline at once. Hereafter neither of us will be at home to Mr. Wishington."—Washington Star.

Where Honesty Exists.

"People in the small towns up in Connecticut," said the traveling man, "appear to be much more honest than they are in New York. Not one family in ten thinks of such a thing as burglar alarms, and half of them do not even lock their outer doors when they retire. But what impresses me most are the street laundry boxes.

"Nearly every town of 5,000 or more inhabitants has several places where laundry packages are received and delivered. These places are generally dry goods or notion stores, or haberdasheries. Suburban merchants as a rule do not keep their stores open much later than 8 o'clock in the evening and do not open them until 7 or half past 7 in the morning.

"This does not suit all their patrons, so it is no infrequent sight to see outside the store a large red box with a fair sized opening in the top. The box bears the legend 'If the store is closed, put your laundry in here.' Now, just imagine a New York laundry office using a receptacle like that! Why, five minutes after a package was deposited in the box it would be fished out, and in an hour its contents would be in the possession of some dealer in second-hand clothing. But up in Connecticut the scheme seems to work very well, and all I can say is that it is a tribute to the general honesty of the community."—New York Herald.

The Legend of a Bell.

The largest hanging bell in the world is in a Buddhist monastery near Canton. It is 18 feet high and 45 feet in circumference and is of solid bronze. Canton has a pretty little fable connected with it. The story is told by Mrs. J. P. Newman in one of her sketches of travel. The life of the founder of the greatest bell of China had been threatened by the emperor because of his unsuccessful attempts to make a bell having perfect purity of tone. The bell founder's beautiful daughter, witnessing her father's agony while imploring the emperor for one more trial, consulted the gods as to the reason for failure. Being told that should the blood of a fair maiden mingle with the bell metal the result would be secured, she, waiting beside her father until able to see her face in the molten ore, plunged in and was destroyed. To the sacrifice of this maiden the Chinese attribute the beauty and sweetness of the tone of the great bell of Ta-Cung-tz.—New York Times.

Extraordinary Carvings.

Some very extraordinary carvings are to be found at Thomboo, on the Irawaddy, where they are cut out of the face of a high cliff rising directly from the river bank and are of great size. They consist of a succession of rudely formed niches, in appearance something like the catacombs of Rome, and these are full of large and small images of Buddha, who is represented in several positions. On the summit of the cliff is a pagoda of great sanctity, which is visited every year by large numbers of pilgrims.

Three Masted Schooners.

It was on the great lakes that the three masted schooner first made its appearance. The unique character of lake navigation created the necessity for this type of sailing craft because of the fact that with this class of vessel sailors could handle the sheets from the deck at times when it was impossible to go aloft in one of those sudden storms which make the life of the lake skipper an uncertain and anxious one.—Ainslee's Magazine.

Curing a Pernicious Habit.

The plan of arresting people who throw banana skins on the sidewalks and of fining them or sending them to the bridewell is all right as far as it goes, but it does not seem as if the right punishment had been provided. Any one guilty of that offense ought to be sent either to the Detention Hospital For the Insane or to the Home For the Feeble Minded.—Chicago Post.

English Astronomy.

Much more interest is taken in practical astronomy in England than in America. Astronomical classes are encouraged by the use of the telescopes like that one on the East Heath, London, which is a reflecting telescope of a 10½ inch mirror. The lectures are instructive.

BEWARE.

It is reported that Red Lake Falls proposes to cast 700 votes. Such a vote would be fraudulent to the extent of 350 votes because they have not got them. Such proceedings will simply not be tolerated and the authors and promoters of such a thing will lay up a big lot of trouble for themselves and their dupes.

VOTE NO ON BONDS.

$50.00 Reward.

Beware of fraudulent Votes. $50 will be paid For the Conviction of every fraudulent voter.

Senator Jones, of Nevada, whose speech against the republican gold standard bill was among the best heard after stating that the measure was vicious from beginning to end, and that it provided for a permanent increase of the bonded debt, said: "This bill places in the national banks of control of the bonded debt of the country. Whenever the banks see fit they can reduce the gold reserve below the limit and force an issuance of bonds; and this process can go on indefinitely. All this is in the interest of the creditor, in the interest of the bond-holders, and grievously against the interest of the people. Political independence is much to be desired, but I would rather live under an absolute despotism and have financial independence than to have political independence and be financially dependent. Political independence without financial independence is only independence in name."

How Shrapnel Operates.

Shrapnel shell is a beautiful and ingenious missile. It consists of a hollow, elongated shell, with a bursting charge of powder at the base and filled with from 200 to 600 half inch bullets, according to the size of the gun. It is fitted with a time fuse, which is "set" to fire the bursting charge at a given number of seconds after the shell has left the gun. The bursting charge in turn blows the head off the shell and sends forward the 200 to 600 bullets, which continue their course in a conical shower on to the ground.

Not a Violent Case.

Mrs. Peck—Henry, what would you do if I were to die suddenly?

Henry—Pray, don't talk of such a thing. I think it would almost drive me crazy.

Mrs. Peck—Do you think you would marry again?

Henry—Oh, no! I don't think I would be as crazy as that.—Chicago News.

An Exclusive Book.

The "Almanach de Gotha" is the most exclusive book of its kind, and perhaps of any kind in the world, and to get one's name in its pages implies that one is either an exalted personage or something very much like it. And of those whose names appear very few are able to boast of having a portrait between its select and scarlet covers.—London Letter.

Why He Hurried.

"Young man," said the old gentleman, "my daughter is too young to marry. A girl of her age cannot be sure of her own mind in a matter of such importance."

"I fully realize that," replied the young man, who had just secured the fair one's consent. "That's why I don't want to wait."—Chicago Post.

Escapes Taxation.

A novel way to avoid paying taxes upon land was taken advantage of Wednesday by Mrs. Annie Swenson of St. Hilaire. Mrs. Swenson's husband entered a piece of land in 1892, and the family has since lived upon it, the husband dying in 1895. The widow might have proved up on the claim under the seven year limit, next month, and it would have been hers without further payment. Instead of doing this she relinquished the claim and placed thereon a new filing in her own name, and may now live upon it seven years before proving, without being called upon to pay any taxes. Thus for 14 years she has the use of the land tax free, upon payment of the fee of $14 required by those who file upon land.—Crookston Times.

The Harem a Prison.

The western boast that every man's house is his castle is as nothing to the sanctity of the eastern harem. No officer of the law may enter a harem, and therefore there is no safeguard for the life and liberty of its inhabitants. One day they may be slaves, the next princesses and the next strangled or poisoned. An ill disposed man could carry off an enemy to his harem and kill him, and none would be the wiser.

Getting Advice.

The girl's father was rich, and the suitor for her hand was poor, but remarkably persistent.

"Papa," she said to the old gentleman, "if Frank asks me this evening to marry him what shall I say?"

"Say whatever you think is best, my child."

"How best, papa? Best for me or best for Frank?"—Detroit Free Press.

Look Out for Your own Interests.

We wish to assure the tax payers of Red Lake county that the business men of St. Hilaire and Thief River mean every word they say when they offer you a $10,000 court house free. You certainly have no valid reason to doubt their word. You cannot say that the people of either towns have deceived you. The proposition is certainly not new. Many county seat towns build the court house in order to hold the county seats. St. Hilaire and Thief River would jump at the chance to build you a court house free. Is there any reason why you should not expect the same treatment from Red Lake Falls if they wish to retain the county seat let them give you a Court House. The newspapers of that town are boasting of the wealth of their merchants and business men. If they are wealthy they made it out of you farmers. Now let them give back a little of it to you in the shape of a court house. If they build the court house the expense will be confined to $10,000. If you vote bonds to build it $10,000 will only be a starter and you will pay $30,000 before you get through.

Don't bond yourselver for any court house foolishness. Don't let them increase your taxes another dollar. Farmers for once look out for your own interests.

Mask Ball.

The masquerade ball given at the Hotel Markham last Wednesday evening under the auspices of the St. Hilaire Cornet Band proved to be the event of the season. The dining hall was taxed to its utmost capacity by those who were masked. Freund's orchestra of Red Lake Falls furnished the music while Prof. Adams of the same place prompted the dancers. A bewildering variety of people appeared on the floor. Most of the ladies wore elegant costumes with a sprinkling of comical ones as becomes a mask mall. Among the notable ones were the butterfly and sunflower girls, flower girls, and several little girls in blue, the Spanish bull fighter, old Satan, the tramp and many others of a very comical make-up which were exceptionally good. Masks were removed at 11:00 o'clock and congratulations were in order after which dancing was resumed and the spectators allowed on the floor. Supper was served at midnight and again dancing was the order of the evening which lasted until 4:00 a. m., when they all departed for their respective homes. From all accounts they all had the best kind of a time. The band boys are delighted as it proved a grand success.

The schemers at Red Lake Falls are preparing to cast a heavy vote for bonds They had 318 votes at the last general election and we doubt if there has been any great increase since. Should it appear that an unusual increase of votes is cast there will be contest and no bonds can be marketed in the face of a disputed count. Boys better go slow.

VOTE NO ON BONDS

Ruin Ahead.

Red Lake Falls already bankrupt and Red Lake county on the high road to financial ruin. $10,000 for a court house will not ruin the county did you say? Brick Court Houses are not built for that money and this one if built will cost nearer $30,000 than $10,000 and county orders will be issued for the balance. Red Lake Falls schemers never go in debt half way. They will never feel happy unless they have the county in as bad shape as their city. If you want to save your home from being taxed away from you why get a hustle on you and vote no on bonds next Saturday.

"I think I would go crazy with pain were it not for Chamberlain's Pain Balm," writes Mr. W. H. Stapleton, Herminie, Pa. "I have been afflicted with rheumatism for several years and have tried remedies without number, but Pain Balm is the best medicine I have got hold of." One application relieves the pain. For sale at The Imperial Drug Store.

Forfeited Taxes.

This week we again publish the Polk county forfeited tax sale and also the Red Lake county delinquent tax list. These statements are particularly interesting just at this time. For instance; in the forfeited tax list the city of Red Lake Falls whose citizens are trying to induce the farmers to vote for Court House Bonds occupies 34 columns of space to advertise 4,720 pieces of land in that city which the owners do not pay the taxes on. No wonder the people of that city are not afraid to vote bonds. Does anyone pay their taxes at Red Lake Falls? If certainly looks as if they did not. "Vote bonds and let the other fellow pay the bill" must be their motto. Will the tax-payers stand it?

Dentist.

—Dr. J. H. Thomas, the Crookston dentist will be at Hotel Markham, St. Hilaire, Feb. 26th and 27th prepared to do all kinds of up to date dental work in all branches. All work warranted. Remember the dates 26th and 27th.

VOTE NO ON BONDS.

Below You Will Find a Few Reasons Why You Should Vote Against The Bonds. St. Hilaire, or Thief River Falls, Will Build a Court House Free to the County.

To The Voters of Red Lake County.

The schemers and county ring at Red Lake Falls want you to vote $10,000.00 more bonds. They are trying to fool you with a misleading array of figures into voting more bonds, by pretending that it will save you money. If you follow their advice, you will land the county in debt as badly as Red Lake Falls already is.

WHAT THEY HAVE DONE WITH RED LAKE FALLS:

The tax rate is almost seven per cent per annum: they are above the legal limit of debt, and Red Lake Falls is to-day the most bankrupt town in the state. Over four thousand three hundred lots in that town will be sold in a few weeks to pay accumulated back taxes.

RED LAKE COUNTY IS ALREADY BONDED FOR $30,000.00:

And the money is all spent, without very much to show for it: Polk county is claiming $15,000.00 more, which, if allowed, will make the total debt $50,000.00. The ten thousand more which they ask you to vote is merely a bait to draw you on. When that is spent more money will be needed, and the probable result will be that you will be drawn into an expenditure of thirty or forty thousand dollars before you get through with the court house scheme.

If this scheme was an honest one, why was it kept concealed till the last minute, and passed over the protest of two of the county commissioners, and the election called at a time when it was known that many of the voters were away from home at work in the woods?

YOU CAN HAVE A COURT HOUSE FREE!

If you think that a new court house is absolutely necessary, you can have one free by locating the County Seat either at St. Hilaire or Thief River Falls.

We published a copy of the guarantee of these towns, and the original documents are now in the vaults of the First State Bank of Thief River Falls, and can be seen by any voters of the county.

If Red Lake Falls has the interest of the county at heart, and wishes to economize, let it donate a suitable site for a court house and give the $10,000.00 to boot.

RED LAKE COUNTY NEEDS MONEY TO SPEND ON DRAINS AND DITCHES, AND IMPROVED ROADS.

To the County Commissioners and Tax Payers of Red Lake County, Minn.

The undersigned, citizens and residents of St. Hilaire hereby guarantee to you that if the County Seat of Red Lake county shall during the next three years be located within the Village of St. Hilaire, we will furnish a suitable site for a Court House and Jail, and build thereon a suitable Court House and Jail, to cost not less than ten thousand dollars, which ground and building shall be the property of the county FREE.

Communicated.

In order to keep me informed as to the affairs of the county and the administration thereof, as well as to the schemers, which are being plotted and planned to build up Red Lake Falls on behalf of the county, the "Gazette" is sent to me now and then—free of charge—I suppose.

In one or two of the last issues of that paper, I noticed an attack upon the ex-sheriff of the county, Henry Norland.

As Henry Norland is not home at present, having for some time being in the employ of the Crookston Lumber Company, and probably not having a chance to see those paltry attacks, I would therefore in justice to Mr. Norland say, that while he served as county commissioner of Polk county, at the same time as he ably represented his own district, he sought to promote the whole county and during the short time he served, brought about many good reforms—quite a contrast to the commissioners of Red Lake (Falls) county whose motto; Alpha and Omega seems to be Red Lake Falls. So far as placing the St. Hilaire bridges so close together making it inconvenient for the traveling public, I have not hitherto heard of any complaint from anyone. The northern bridge was placed where it stands now by the Village of St. Hilaire, and the same village spent considerable money aiding the farmers to build a road through the woods leading to the bridge, and it must be said to the credit of St. Hilaire, that they did not try to do it at the county's expense either. As the bridges now are situated, it is very convenient to get into St. Hilaire for the people from the north as well as from the south, which would not have been the case if the bridges had been farther apart.

Poor Editor! who can not find anything else but must resort to and try to make something out of such baseless insignificant charges against a man. So much for Mr. Norland.

If Mr. Norland had been at home, he could probably have drawn the attention of the people to some bridge letting contract of our own commissioners—the Clearwater bridge for instance as well as some other Red Lake Falls curiosities like Dr. Watson's $250 bill for setting a leg. Would any one for a moment believe or think that a doctor outside of Red Lake Falls could have been allowed such a sum for such service as that of Dr. Watson's? I think not.

Using the "Courier's" and the "Gazette's" "Twenty Years Hence Figuring" it would amount to a considerable lot of money on this item alone if a doctor from St. Hilaire or Thief River Falls had been engaged. I leave it to the Courier or Gazette to figure it out how much the saving would have amounted to "Twenty Years From Now" both papers having practiced it in the past.

I hope that Red Lake Falls Ring Rule, will get a little check next Saturday.

P. Engelstad.

The Arnewood Mystery

BY MAURICE H. HERVEY.

Author of "Dead Man's Court," "Somerville's Crime," "Dartmoor," "Maravin's Money," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XIX—(Continued.)

The light that had dawned upon me in the bedroom at Hampstead Road seemed to grow clearer. If Dick's assertions were true (and I saw no reason to doubt them) the murdered man was simply an imposter who had personated the real Luke Arnewood, and that, too, with considerable cleverness. The thing was, obviously, quite possible. One had only to suppose him intimate enough with the real man to learn his true parentage, to have access to his papers, and to have seen my advertisement. A clever scoundrel would quickly see his chance. The subsequent correspondence, backed up by the stolen documents and the photograph, would follow, as a matter of course. No one over here knew Luke Arnewood; the game seemed a safe one to play, provided the real man did not subsequently turn up. Had the adventurer taken this risk, or was Luke Arnewood dead?

It flashed across my mind that the man who had returned by the Wairoa had caused himself to be tattooed on board by a quartermaster. He had chosen the initials L. A. for his arm, and the running R. N. (wood) upon his breast, clearly an imitation of the man he was personating. And now these very same letters, with precisely the same designs, were found upon the arm and breast of the imbecile digger, whom Dicky had pulled out of the shaft! Taken in conjunction with the fact that Nat Rainsforth had, that very day, been tracked to within a mile or so of this very shaft, the conclusion seemed as inevitable as it was startling. Rainsforth must have watched his opportunity to push Dicky's protege down the shaft, and had left Queensland in the full belief that his victim was lying dead at the bottom. And, moreover, the evidence seemed to indicate, very strongly that this resuscitated victim was the real heir to Arnewood Hall. Well! if all this were indeed so, the vengeance of Heaven had already overtaken the would-be murderer. Was it still my duty to hunt down his slayer, or did my task end here?

I thought of my promise to Madge, that answered the question. Her brother was still "wanted" for the Greek street murder, and, even though insane, a criminal lunatic asylum would still be his doom, upon the finding of the coroner's jury. So far as O'Brien and Grudgery were concerned (and Hawkins & Co., too, for the matter of that), the case might, perhaps, be regarded as concluded. But for me, it would end only with the fulfillment of my mission.

I needed help. Why not take the kindly little Strong Man entirely into my confidence? He was sitting opposite to me, also deep in thought.

"Mr. Dicky," I said, abruptly; "light up your pipe, mix yourself some grog, and listen to me. I need your advice, and it may be I shall need the help of those strong arms of yours a few hours hence."

"Both are at your service, sir," he answered. "And, by the way (not that it matters), my real name is Dirk Vanston."

Without further preface, I told him all the main facts of the case, as I knew them, supplemented by such plain deductions as seemed to arise from his own narrative. He listened intently, but never put in a word until I had finished.

"And yet I have heard men say there is no God," was his comment. "Why, blame me, if His hand ain't plain to be seen throughout the whole piece! * * "You'll pardon me, sir, but I can't hardly realize yet the wonder of it all. Ned a gentleman of family and fortune! Nat Rainsforth (who, no doubt, tried to kill him) murdered here in London, and poor, silly Tom suspected of the crime! It just fair dazes me to take it all in, just at first."

"I quite agree with you there, Dirk," I assented. "We must accept the facts as they are, though, and see if we can not bring everything to a satisfactory termination. So far as I can judge, the meeting at the house in Rodney avenue between the stranger and Blogg is almost certain to result in conversation of a compromising character; not impossibly, the whole scheme of the murder may leak out, especially if they should quarrel. We must contrive to be present, or, at all events, within earshot at the interview, and we must be prepared, if need be, to seize the two confederates. One of them is a powerful man, and both may be armed."

"Very good," said Dirk, quietly; "then we had better go armed, also. But I think if I once get my grip on this Blogg I shall need nothing more than a piece of cord to tie him up with. Can you manage the other?"

"Yes," I answered, "you may safely leave the stranger to me."

"May I as just one question?" he inquired, a little awkwardly. "Would it not be simpler, and even safer, to leave the arrest of these two villains to the police?"

"Yes," I answered, "it would, and Inspector Traill would only be too pleased to have the job thrown into his hands. But my personal pride and—well, a great many reasons—impel me to see the thing through without police help."

"Say no more, sir," rejoined Dirk. "Your reasons, whatever they are, are more than sufficient for me. Only tell me at what time and where I am to meet you to-morrow, and I'll be there, fully prepared, to the minute. Luckily, we don't show, to-morrow, and I can take a day off without any reference to the boss. As for Ned and Tom, it'll be a sort of Sunday for them, and they'll be as right as trivets until I get back."

"Very well, Dirk," I said. "Meet me here at 2 o'clock. Take a couple of my cards, in case you forget the address. And, now, help yourself to a night-cap and get back home; it's past 1 o'clock now, and you may need a good night's rest for to-morrow's work."

Despite his protests, I insisted upon seeing the worthy little Hercules into a cab and forcing a half-crown into his hand. I felt upon good terms with him, with myself and with all the world; for, surely, never had such an extraordinary stroke of luck ever befallen inquiry agent as had resulted from my visit to the Hampstead Road show.

CHAPTER XX.

Blackmail.

Somewhat to my surprise, the newsvendor to whose accidental recognition of Tom Webb I owed so much, did not put in his usually punctual appearance, but when I remembered the extra sovereign I had given him, his absence did not surprise me much. Sam could "celebrate a bit of luck," like most of his tribe, and was probably not exactly in form for paying visits.

Almost exactly at 2 o'clock Dirk Vanston called at my rooms, dressed in his very best suit, and looking broader and stronger than ever. He carried a parcel, which proved to contain a length of strong rope, and from his hip-pocket he produced a revolver.

"There, sir!" he exclaimed, surveying these possessions with great satisfaction. "Now I feel ready for any sort of scrimmage that may turn up, though I'd rather have a good rough-and-tumble for choice."

I took a revolver, also, and we started eastwards, pretty confident as to the result should the expedition end in a fight. By previous arrangement the Wairoa steward, Mr. Gray, had agreed to keep Billy on board that afternoon, and when we reached the docks we found that he had kept his promise found that he had kept his promise. He also told me that Blogg had resigned his place on board, although he thereby sacrificed a month's wages, and that Spratt had obtained leave of absence "to visit his sick mother."

"He don't quite trust Blogg," remarked the steward, drily, "that's about the strength of it, and wants to keep an eye on him. He don't seem to have the least idea he's being shadowed himself by a 'tec, but he is, though, and has been for some time back. Now, then, Billy, you know exactly what you have to do; just what this gentleman tells you, and ask no questions."

"I'm fly, sir," replied the boy, with one of his foxy leers. "We'd better get there a bit ahead of them too, hadn't we? Without these gents wants ter get in by the window." And he looked doubtfully at Dirk's vast width of shoulder. There was, obviously, sound sense in this suggestion, and we acted upon it forthwith. The steward saw us to the gates.

"On account, Mr. Gray," I whispered; slipping a ten-pound note into his hand. "I trust you'll have some good news for your wife before morning."

"Thank you, sir, and good-luck," he answered, with a grateful look. "Keep the boy well in hand, sir; he's a bit tricky."

Preceded by Billy, we walked on to Rodney Avenue, near which the boy halted outside an ironmonger's.

"It 'as just struck me, sir," he remarked, "as ow an augur or a good-sized gimlet would come in 'andy. You see, last time I could 'ear most of what was said, but I couldn't see 'em, on account of the door."

"The lad's right," said Dirk. "Let me get it."

"He soon emerged with the required tool, wrapped up in brown paper, which he described as "a half-inch." Billy chuckled and rubbed his hands, though whether with the prospect of perforating doors or spying upon Mr. Blogg, he did not inform us. We had decided to leave the question of our entrance into the house to him, and he took the lead with a full sense of his own importance. He certainly possessed the elements of successful strategy in his cunning young brain—coolness and audacity.

"We'd better not wait till it's quite dark," he remarked, "for fear the others might get in afore we're ready for 'em. It's dusky enough already, I reckon, seein' the 'ouse is set back a good bit from the road. Well, I'll walk in, carryin' that gent's parcel, as though I was a shop-boy, and knock at the 'all door, just to make sure there ain't no one there yet. If there is, an' they answer the knock, why, I just ask if Mrs. Brown lives there, an' 'ooks it. But, of course, there won't be no one, an' so round I goes to the back as bold as though I lived there. Then I shins up the ladder and in through the window, same as afore, an' opens the front door for you two gents, arter I whistles."

"That boy'll die in gaol yet, if he don't get hanged," muttered Dirk, shaking his head, as Billy sauntered down the footpath, swinging his parcel and whistling "Ta-ra-boom-de-ay" in realistic errand-boy style.

It was our special business to see that no policeman was watching his movements; an easy task, seeing that there was not a guardian of the law in sight. In a remarkably short space of time we heard the whistle-signal, and were admitted into the house.

It was quite dark in the hall, but our youthful guide had profited by his previous experience, and now produced a small bull's-eye lantern in great triumph. He lit it, tested the slide to see that it worked smoothly, and led the way down stairs into the kitchen. It was a large one, and fairly well furnished with cooking utensils but showing no signs of recent use. It had two doors beside the one we entered by, and both were locked, though the keys had not been removed. One opened into a scullery. The other gave entrance into a small room containing various odds and ends, brushes, boxes of soap, etc., and, apparently, had once been used as a sort of store room.

"This is our plant," remarked Dirk delightedly. "Could scarcely be better for our purpose. We've only got to lock the door from the inside, bore a couple of holes, as suggested by our smart young friend here, and we'll see and hear all that goes on splendidly. Billy, my lad, just take your boots off and slip up into the hall, so as to be able to warn us should you hear a latch-key in the front door, will you?"

"All right, guv'ner," said the boy, with a longing look at the augur. "I'll keep cavey. If you hear a cat miaowing up stairs, douse the glim right away and lock the door."

"What about yourself?" I inquired.

"Well, I'd rather get back here, of course," he replied, "but I mightn't get down fast enough, 'specially in the dark. Besides, 'tain't no dead certainty as they'll meet down here at all this time. There's 'eaps of other rooms up stairs. So I'll just 'ang about on the stairs, and perhaps dodge down later on, same as afore. So, go ahead with your holes, guv'ner."

"I don't believe that lad will hang, after all," growled Dirk, as the boy disappeared, noiselessly. "He could see and hear everything safely by remaining with us, and yet he's taking a big risk up stairs, upon the off-chance of being useful. There's grit in him, sir!"

I thought so, too, and registered a mental memo. very considerably to Billy's subsequent advantage. Meanwhile, Dirk had got his augur at work, from the kitchen side (to insure clean, unsplintered holes), and our peep-holes were speedily made. There was the risk, of course, that they would be noticed; but this risk, such as it was, had to be taken. Then we stacked the contents of the room in a corner, so as to allow ourselves elbow room without danger of upsetting anything, and, extinguishing the lantern beforehand, awaited the cat-call. Waiting under such circumstances is an excellent test alike of a man's nerve and his temper, and I must confess that the Dutchman's racial phelegm gave him a marked advantage. I was becoming quite irritable from excitement, when the welcome feline cry at length reached our ears, and the watchful Dirk had quickly locked us in.

A minute later some one entered the kitchen, which was thereupon illuminated by an execrably-feeble hand-lamp. This the newcomer placed on the central table, and, as the light fell upon his face, I was surprised to recognize, not the stranger, but Mr. Phillip Blake. "The master has come, instead of the man," was my natural inference.

The Court Committed Itself.

The prisoner was making his appearance before the magistrate for the hundredth time.

"Well," said the magistrate, "you here again?"

"Yes," your honor, responded the prisoner.

"What's the charge?"

"Vagrancy—same as before, your honor."

"It seems to me you are here about half your time."

"Yes, about that, your honor."

"Well, what do you do it for? Why don't you work?"

"I do, your honor, more than half my time."

"Ah, now," said the magistrate, surprised, "if you can tell me where you have ever worked I'll let you off."

"In prison, your honor," answered the prisoner brazenly, and the judge kept his word.—Collier's Weekly.

What Worried Him.

An old Irish laborer walked into the luxurious studio of an artist a few days ago and asked for money to obtain a meal. He explained that he had just been discharged from the county hospital and was too weak to work. He was given a trifle and departed.

One of four young ladies, art students, who were present, said: "Mr. Blank, can't we engage that old man and sketch him?"

Blank ran out and caught him, and said: "If you can't work and want to make a few shillings, come back to my rooms. The young ladies want to paint you."

The Irishman hesitated, so Blank remarked—: "It won't take long, and it's an easy way to make a snug sum."

"Oi know that," was the reply, "but Oi was a wunderin how Oi'd git th' paint off afterward."—Tid-Bits.

Earnings Versus Salary.

"There is in the employ of our house," says a Philadelphia salesman, "a young man who is assistant bookkeeper. He's a steady chap, minds his own business, and is as shrewd as they make them. The other day the senior partner of the firm, who seldom comes around, made a tour of inspection, and as he approached the assistant bookkeeper he noticed the solemn expression on his face. Desiring to be congenial, he said:

"'How are you, young man? I see you are at your work. That is good. Close attention to business will always bring its own reward. Tell me, what are you earning now a week?'

"The young man, with a moment's hesitation, answered: 'Twenty dollars, sir, but I only get half of that.'"—New York Tribune.

Historic House Sold.

White Webbs, Enfield, is to come under the hammer on the last day of this month. In 1570 Queen Elizabeth granted old White Webbs House to her physician, Robert Huicke, and "Guido Fawkes" stated in his confession that Father Garnet took the house from "Dr. Hewicke." The house gained its greatest notoriety in connection with the gunpowder plot, and a carnival is held every year on the 5th of November in the district. Fawkes staid at the house with the conspirators from the Wednesday till the Sunday before his arrest on November 4, 1605, and it is during that period that Harrison Ainsworth makes his romantic marriage take place in the forest with Viviand Radcliffe, the heroine in his "Guy Fawkes." This forest is part of the original Enfield Chase, a portion of which is included in the estate of about fifty acres.—London Leader.

Produce Little Shock.

In North Africa all the wounded men agree as to the very small amount of shock produced by the Mauser bullet, many stating that they went on some distance after feeling that they were hit, one man telling me that he did not notice being hit at all until he began to feel dizzy and found that he had lost a lot of blood. One notable circumstance is that the vast majority of the wounds are in the extremities. This the men attribute to the wild firing of the Boers, and to the fact that they were generally hit just at the moment of leaving or taking cover.

A New Motive Power.

While one group of inventors is at work on liquid air as a motive power, with a temperature enormously below zero, another makes a claim of remarkable merits for superheated water in light and heavy transportation. The water is heated in upright steel tubes to 150 degrees above the temperature of steam in a locomotive. When released into an engine it expands nearly 1,000 times and performs the services required of a storage power.—Indianapolis News.

Gatacre Had Gumption.

Gen. Gatacre, a day or two before embarking, remarked to a military friend that our forces were not by any means going to an easy task in South Africa. "It was no child's play in the Soudan," said he, "but it will be stern work against the Boers, and I can tell you that I don't expect to be present at an unbroken succession of victories. We shall win eventually by sheer perseverance."—London Daily News.

A CAPE TOWN JAIL.

Special Punishment Inflicted Upon Many of the Cosmopolitan Population.

Cape Town, Africa, has among other novelties a prison containing about 1,000 prisoners, where almost every nation of the earth is represented. There are American miners and sons of the English aristocracy, French, Italians, Russians and Hebrews. A great many of the prisoners are serving political sentences. Most of these prisoners are employed in building forts and fortifications. The hillside overlooking the city of Cape Town is a veritable Gibraltar. Tier upon tier of modern guns have been placed here by the government, and the work has nearly all been done by the convicts. The convicts who are not employed on public works are hired out to farmers. Farmers of South Africa much prefer convict labor to that of the natives, because the convicts do not have an opportunity to become intoxicated. Beside being provided with food and fuel, each convict is paid for at the rate of 36 to 60 cents a day. The government furnishes guards to prevent criminals from escaping from their employers. All prisoners are divided into three classes, according to the length of their terms and their behavior. Those known as the first class are distinguished by a black band around their hats. When they first enter the prison they are thus marked and remain so for three months. If they behave they are then put into the probation class and marked with a yellow ribbon. Here they remain for eight months. If they continue to behave well they are transferred to the good-conduct class and marked with a red band. In this class they remain until their sentence has expired. There are no paroles. The classes are not permitted to mix, but each class has an opportunity after working hours for social intercourse among its own members. All prisoners are housed in wards, none being confined in cells. Prisoners are kindly treated as long as they behave themselves. Dungeons are never used as punitive agencies, and only now and then is solitary confinement resorted to. Caning and flogging are sometimes found necessary, but no prison official is allowed to inflict either of these. They must be imposed by a magistrate, who visits the prison once a week. Among the prisoners in Cape Town jail who have attracted special attention recently was a young native, educated at Oxford, who headed his father's tribe against an insurrection against the British authority. He was captured and sentenced to fifteen years in this prison. At the end of five years he was liberated and immediately returned to his tribe. Another prisoner went to Cape Town as a missionary and secretary of the Young Men's Christian association, which annually handled immense sums of money. He became secretary of the Cape Town Building and Loan association and manipulated the books so that he was enabled to steal $183,000 before being caught. He is now doing seven years in this prison.

FASHION IN GAMBLING.

Roulette Is Now the Fashionable Game of Sportive New Yorkers.

"There is a fashion in gambling as in everything else," said C. K. Bundy of New York, "and just now the sporting rage in Gotham is all in the direction of roulette. One hears a lot of poker yarns, but they are mostly hoary with antiquity, for the big games of squeeze played nowadays are like visits of angels. I was talking to the proprietor of a swell gambling house in the heart of New York city the other day, and he confirmed what I have said as to the popularity of roulette. He has in his place faro, baccarat, and the wheel, a conclusive showing that bank and baccarat had both been superseded by the seductive game of roulette. As to poker, he doesn't countenance it in his establishment, for the reason that it is a tedious way for the house to make money, however large the rake-off, as compared with any of the other games. He told me that it was a common thing for men to come into his place and bet him $500 to $1,500 on a single turn of the wheel, and I know he was telling the truth, for many of his patrons are known to me and they are among the high rollers of the city who look on betting $500 about as the average piker regards the risking of a $2 note. These plungers like roulette for two reasons—they get quick action for their money and they are satisfied that the game is absolutely square. In the first place, though the percentage in favor of the proprietor is not large, being only 5 5-19 in 100, it will beat the player in the long run, and therefore there is no reason to operate a dishonest machine. Secondly, the wheel is constructed so that the lifting of its top displays the interior and the presence of wires would be readily detected. Without wires there is no chance for fraud. The bigger the bets the better for the house, although there are times when the plunger will make the professional sick. There has been so much crooked work done in baccarat and faro that both have steadily lost in popularity. Of course there are fiends at both who will take chances on being robbed, though I do not mean to imply that all bank games are of the skin variety. Today in New York a citizen with sporting blood in his veins can get all the amusements he wants at swell establishments, where entertainment as luxurious as any Delmonico can furnish is provided gratis for those who feel disposed to try the fickle goddess of fortune."—Washington Post.

What Joseph Was.

The Sabbath-school teacher had been telling the class about Joseph, particularly with reference to his coat of many colors, and how his father rewarded him for being a good boy, for Joseph, she said, told his father whenever he caught any of his brothers in the act of doing wrong. "Can any little boy or girl tell me what Joseph was?" the teacher asked, hoping that some of them had caught the idea that he was Jacob's favorite. "I know," one of the little girls said, holding up her hand: "What was he?" "A tattle-tale!" was the reply.—Baltimore News.

WHEN BABY TALKS.

IS MOVED BY PITY LIKE OTHER INFANTS.

Another Defeat for Papa—She Knows What She Means When She Sees Her Own Image in the Mirror—Interest in the Rabbit.

Although the new baby has lapsed into the old or ancient baby, it has retained with the name a few vanishing characteristics, which, even in their description, reveal the preponderating influence of the old. The new baby's father is still able to take comfort in the shreds and patches of his theory, says the New York Commercial Advertiser. His suppression of the little infant in the helpless days of her earliest youth, when for the sake of her nerves he kept her in a dark room and forbade her the pleasures derived normally from the pleased idiocy of the grown people who like to dandle and chirp, has modified, even in these days of the baby's emancipation, her original and intrinsic character. With pride the vanquished father points to the fact that until recently the new baby could not talk. It is true that the baby's vocabulary is small for an infant of its age, but of late she has been stretching the few words at her control with accumulated intensity of meaning, and the obvious meaning of her utterances is that the old female, which the father sought to suppress, is strong within her. On Christmas eve the baby's uncle brought her a live rabbit only a few weeks old, an albino with pink eyes and nose, and a white soft body. The new baby said, "No, no," when the rabbit for the first time hopped into its gaze, thus showing the good old feminine conservatism toward strangers. But this stranger was pretty and young, and soon moved the instinctive love for the cunning in the new baby's soul. Her blue eyes bulged toward it many minutes in silence as it darted about frightening the new baby's mother, who thinks the movements of the rabbit most illogical. The new baby waved away with an anxious gesture any coarse adult who approached the object of her study.

Then it was that she began to show the tender solicitude for what is young, pink and cute, that is so characteristic of what has come to us all along the line of female history that it must have carried a pang to the new baby's father. He connected it, no doubt, with the new baby's pity for the severed tiger's head in the rug. It harked back to the existence of a soul in the new baby, the development of which soul we have narrated in a former chapter, and which the father regarded as a sign of emotional weakness, much in the same way that the German philosopher, Nietzsche, regards the capacity for pity in the modern soul. Pity, thinks Nietzsche, introduced by the Christian religion, and fostered by Wagner, is a disintegrating factor in civilization, and with all old and useless people, ought to be eliminated. That the new baby is afflicted with the modern disease and has a soul, the essence of which, perhaps, is pity, was manifested again, to the father's reiterated pain, apropos of the rabbit. For soon the delicate new baby, her conservatism overcome, beamed interest and protection. The father then said, with a ghost of hope in his voice: "Do you want the rabbit?"

"Sure!" shouted the infant, with all the inherited emphasis of a long line of babies in her voice, and with the concentrated unction poured into one word on account of her small vocabulary. Most words the new baby pronounces with hesitation, feeling that the rich meaning overlaps and she is conservative about agreeing with what she is not quite certain of, but when she has a vivid word which fits a vivid feeling she thunders it forth with a tremendous joy in mere expression which makes the father tremble at the idea of a literary decadent. So, with perfect confidence that she had hit the right word, the new baby shouted: "Sure!" A large portion of the remainder of the new baby's vocabulary is most fittingly used apropos of other young and pretty things. She knows what she means when she sees her own image in the mirror. She caresses a lock of fine hair, and commends with that peculiar emphasis with which she welcomed the rabbit, the baby in the mirror for possessing something so excellent. She states with great distinctness, too, that she has a slipper, which is light blue in color, and very dimly, and she unmistakably points out the fact that her hood and her stockings are not so bad; indeed, quite the reverse. She does not feel the limits of her vocabulary when she comes in contact with the radiating reality of something as young and pretty as herself. It is as if she recognized that such things represented her platonic self or the disinterested embodiment into a particular erscheinung here and now of what has pleasingly existed for all eternity and of the beauty and desirability of which she may unhesitatingly feel confident and say "Sure!" with all the strength of her lungs. The new baby, however, is doomed to a very trying ordeal. When she begins to pity her father and finds that pity for what he so idealistically, if mistakenly, represents goes against the eternal laws of her type, there will give temporary pause to the sureness of her "Sure!" and she will have to feel about for a subtler and sadder vocabulary.

A Gigantic Omelet.

A company of the third African French battalion stationed at Ker (Tunis) has just enjoyed the most gigantic omelet ever made. At the request of the farmers in the neighborhood, the soldiers were sent on an expedition to annihilate the swarms of sparrows which were playing havoc with the crops. Their work finished, they brought back as spoils of war 5,000 eggs, which the regimental cook mixed with many pounds of other ingredients and made into an omelet nearly seven feet in circumference.

TOLD BY THE OLD CIRCUS MAN.

The Greatest of All Giants Bears a Hand at Bricklaying.

"One of the things that somehow used to please the old man very much," said the old circus man, "was to see the greatest of all giants laying brick; and when he was looking over a town in advance, as he always did, to see what opportunities there were for presenting the giant most strikingly to the mind and eye of the people by comparison, he always kept an eye out for buildings under construction; and if he found a brick building going up anywhere, that was up, say, two or three stories, and that had bricklayers at work on it, on a scaffolding, laying brick, why, the old man never failed to take that street into the route of the morning parade even if we had to leave out some more important street nearer the center of the town. When we'd come to that building on the line of march the giant would, apparently, discover it in passing; and the minute he saw it he'd stop. He'd look at the men on the scaffolding with every indication of interest; and then the first thing you know he'd step right out of his place in the line and pick up two or three bricks from the ground and then straighten up his head and shoulders up there above where the men were at work, and then he'd take a trowel right out of the hand of one of the bricklayers—they'd all stopped work to look at him—and go to work laying brick. Of course the old man had halted the parade long before this, and you'd see it strung along the road looking on, with half the town looking on, too, at the greatest of all giants laying brick on a wall that had already been carried up three stories, he standing on the ground as he worked. His arms were long enough so that he could reach across over the platform of the scaffold to the wall easily. He might have taken bricks and mortar from there, but he didn't; he would bend down and take 'em from the ground every time. As a matter of fact, he was a very good bricklayer, and I think the giant always enjoyed this work himself; and he'd lay a course or two, between, say, two windows, in good shipshape manner and in good time; and then he'd hand the trowel back to the man on the scaffold that he'd borrowed it from and step back into the line. Then the old man would give the signal, and the band would strike up, and the whole procession would face forward again, including the branches, these being the men that marched immediately ahead of the giant, carrying long poles with crotches at the upper end, wherewith they lifted out of the way and held up while he passed under them, tree branches that might otherwise have impeded, him or compelled him to bend like an ordinary mortal in passing under them; which we never permitted him to do; and then away they'd all go, the elephants and the great giraffe, and the knights in armor on horseback, and the animals in cages, and all the glittering attractions of a circus, but with the great bricklayer towering high, easily the greatest of them all."

AN IDIOTIC JOKE

By Which E. A. Sothern Kept a Stage Empty For One Trip.

"The late Edward A. Sothern," said C. H. Talcott of Buffalo, at the Fifth Avenue hotel, "was known far and wide as a practical joker, and many of those he perpetrated found their way into print. He would go to any amount of personal inconvenience and trouble to carry out one of his jokes, and I remember his telling me once with great glee how he had got into an empty stage in the lower part of Fifth avenue and succeeded in riding the length of the route and return without any one getting aboard or the company receiving any fares except his own. The manner in which he accomplished this he explained to be as follows: The stage had proceeded some three blocks, when it stopped to pick up a couple of women who had signaled it, whereupon Sothern, who could not of course, be seen by the driver, began to dance up and down the interior of the stage, wave his arms about and grin and chatter in idiotic and expansive manner. The women decided that they would have none of, that particular stage, as they did not consider riding with a lunatic as conducive to either health or quiet of nerves. With every subsequent would-be passenger this maneuver was successfully repeated until the stage had returned to the original point where Sothern had boarded it, when, luckily for the receipts of the company, an important engagement compelled him reluctantly to leave it."—New York Tribune.

An Interesting Discovery.

Reuter's correspondent at Philippopolis says that an interesting discovery has lately been made by M. Georges Seure, member of the French Archaeological School at Athens, in the shape of a Thracian triumphal car of the later Roman period, or about the fourth century A. D. It was excavated in the tumulus called Douhova (ghost's mound), at the foot of the Rhodopes, near the village of Pastousha, situated to the southwest of Philippopolis. All the metallic fittings of the chariot, with small bronze figures as decorations, and the harness for one horse, were found, together with five human skulls and several semi-decayed swords and lances. The discovery has so pleased Prince Ferdinand that he has offered to give from his private purse the sum of 10,000 francs, to which the Bulgarian government will add 5,000 francs, and the French another 5,000 francs, for the purpose of continuing these archaeological researches in the country.

I Look 25 Years Younger

"I am now seventy-two years of age and my hair is as dark as it was twenty-five years ago. People say I look at least that much younger than I am. I would be entirely bald or snow-white if it were not for your Hair Vigor." — Mrs. Anna Lawrence, Chicago, Ill., Dec. 22, 1898.

Is Yours Snow-white?

There is no getting around such a testimonial as this. You can't read it over without being convinced. These persons do not misrepresent, for their testimonials are all unsolicited.

Ayer's Hair Vigor restores color to gray hair every time. And it is a wonderful food to the hair, making it grow rich and heavy, and keeping it soft and glossy all the time. It is also an elegant dressing.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

A FORMER AMERICAN SAYS.

Doubled Their Cultivated Lands and More Than Doubled Their Stock.

The following letter, written by Mr. John Cummings of Wetaskiwin, Alberta, Canada, formerly of Washington, to a friend in the United States, is only one of a hundred similar cases, and what was done by Mr. Cummings can more easily be done today by any good, sober and industrious farmer who chooses to make his home in the dominion.

Dear Sir: You want to know how I got along since I came into Northern Alberta. I am happy to inform you that I am not ashamed to tell.

We located five miles northeast of Wetaskiwin; left Farmington, Wash., on the 29th day of May, driving all the way. We had time to build our log house the first fall, and to make us comfortable for the family and stock. We then built four stables, 18x20 inside, so that we could put everything inside them when the cold got down to the fifties, and worked hard getting up the stables, and got through dubbing on the 1st of December; but, to our surprise, we had no use for the stables only for the milk cow and two spans of horses. The balance of the horses lived on the prairie all winter, and took care of themselves. The doors of two stables were left open for them to go into in a cold time, but they would not do it, but stayed out on the prairie the coldest night we had and looked as spry as crickets.

I can go ten rods back of my house and count ten residents. I know all of their circumstances. Every one of them have doubled their cultivated land, and doubled their animals, and a great deal more. All of us are comparatively out of debt and an unusually big crop to thresh and prospects of a fair price, and I expect we are as well contented a lot of people as there is to be found from Florida to the Klondike.

My son bought two pounds of twine to the acre, and when we started to bind some barley we found that instead of taking two pounds to the acre, it was taking nearly five pounds. Then you ought to have seen him hitch up a team and make for town for 100 pounds more. I cannot say how it will thresh. All I can say is that it is well-headed, and takes an enormous amount of twine.

Vacancies at West Point.

There remain but fifteen vacancies to the West Point Military academy for the examinations in June. Members of Congress have been unusually prompt in making their nominations in the past five months. All presidential appointments have been filled as well, and the prospects are now that no additional places will be at the president's disposal until 1901. One member of Congress, from the Fifth Maryland district, has allowed his district to be unrepresented at West Point for nearly two years.—Philadelphia Call.

AVOID DANGER.

The Danger of Catarrh Ointments That Contain Mercury.

This journal, although more particularly devoted to all that interests finance, commerce and manufacturing, is nevertheless always awake to the need and wants of its readers, let the subject be what it may. We were asked to investigate and report upon the merits of the various catarrh remedies on the market. The production of preparations of injurious composition cannot, unfortunately, be stopped or restricted at present, or until our state legislatures can be induced to pass such suitable and stringent laws as will effectually prevent their appearance on the market. In the meantime, the people must look out for themselves. In this matter, we have made a most careful and painstaking investigation, realizing the confidence that would be placed in our reply. Our medical staff employed to make such investigations were most favorably impressed with the preparation known as Hall's catarrh cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co. of Toledo, Ohio, and agreed that this peerless remedy deserves our highest indorsement. Many of the catarrh remedies on the market contain mercury, which destroys the sense of smell and deranges the whole system when entering through the mucous surfaces. From analysis we found that Hall's catarrh cure contains no mercury. It is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. We have no interest whatever in this matter beyond faithfully serving our readers, and as our indorsement is extended without reward of any kind, and is wholly unsolicited by this company, and will be received with the full credence that all our statements have met with for the past eighteen years.—Southern Review of Commerce.

Deaf-Mute Statistics.

Ninety-seven per cent of the offspring of deaf fathers and mothers are deaf. The offspring of these deaf persons generally possess the sense of hearing, the average deafness being 8.6 per cent. This fact is said to be in accordance with two well-established laws of heredity, viz., a physical anomaly tends to be transmitted to offspring, and that the offspring of these tends to revert to the normal type.—Philadelphia Record.

Worse Than the Lernean Hydra—Minute Fresh Water Hydra Can be Cut Into Pieces and in a Few Hours Each Is a Complete Hydra.

The Winter Camp.

The walls of logs are thick and stout;
The rugged hearth is wide and gray;
The roof will keep the thin winds out—
The fire will chase the frosts away;
While we take comfort, merrilee,
And spin brave yarns above the tea.

Lacoble tells of caribou
And long, gray wolves, in Labrador;
And Stanley sings the red canoe;
And Dick expounds his Micmac lore;
While I talk glibly as I can,
With one eye on the frying-pan.

We talk of dees in field and wood,
Of fir-clad hills and miles of spruce—
The alder-swamp's gray solitude—
The trampled shelter of the moose;
And when the bacon is fried brown
We let the conversation down.

Our snowshoes stand against the wall—
They need good rest, for they have gone
Down forest trails, where shy beasts call—
A giant journey since the dawn.
I wonder if they ever tire
And want to lounge about the fire?

What matters it tho' winds blow chill
And foot the drifts about our door,
When we have fire-light, and good-will,
And bear-skins strewn upon the floor,
And bacon, and a pot of tea
To make the time go merrilee?
—Theodore Roberts, in Outing.

Worse Than the Lernean Hydra.

There was once, says mythology, a hydra, which inhabited the marsh of Lerne, in Greece, and spread terror in all the country around. This frightful creature had seven heads, and if some adventurer tried, with praiseworthy intention, to cut off one, it immediately grew again. Now there actually exist animals which, considering their small size, are more dreadful than the hydra of the Greeks. It is a simple sack of some few millimeters in length, called the fresh water hydra. Around the orifice of the sack, an orifice which is the mouth of the animal, are found disposed long arms or tentacles, armed with poisonous darts. The hydra, very greedy and always in quest of prey, ceaselessly agitates its long arms in the water, and if one of them encounters any animalcule, it twines itself around the poor victim, pierces it with its darts, paralyzes it, and so carries it to the mouth of the hydra, which swallows and digests it. There is nothing very extraordinary in all that, but here is where the fantastic begins; cut off one of the arms of the hydra, and at the end of twenty hours the arm will have grown out again; split the animal lengthwise, in such a way as to separate it in two halves, each part folds back on itself, welds its two edges together, and you have two hydras instead of one. Instead of splitting the animal lengthwise, cut it across in such a way as to have at the top a depth of sack without tentacles, at the bottom a kind of ring or tube provided with arms, but open at both ends; you will see the upper half provide itself very rapidly with arms, and the lower part, which already has tentacles, close itself at the top, in such a way that each half of the original hydra will become a complete hydra. Turn the hydra inside out, as one turns the finger of a glove, so that the stomach of the animal becomes its skin, and its skin its stomach. In the first moment the hydra seems to experience a certain inconvenience; it does not seem to be sure of itself. But, at the end of a few hours, it appears to take its lot philosophically, and takes food and digests it with its former skin, which becomes its new stomach.

Unpleasant Bedfellows in Mexico

The adventures of naturalists in odd corners of the globe rival the experiences of explorers in variety and interest. Dr. Maximilian Schumann, a Belgian naturalist, journeyed through Mexico, not many years ago, and here is one of the reminiscences which he brought back with him: I had gone a day's journey on horseback from the city of Zacatecas towards the southeast to examine some ancient Toltec ruins. I arrived at my destination late at night and lighted a fire within the ruins to make my supper. After eating I spread my blanket and lay down. When I awoke in the moring, my first impulse was to stretch out my hand. I threw it out from under the blanket and as I did so it almost touched a big, poisonous rattlesnake, quietly coiled by my side. I escaped by the merest chance. Looking toward my feet, what was my astonishment to see six other rattlesnakes coiled at intervals over my body. The reptiles did not belong to the variety commonly known in California, but were of a peculiarly poisonous species found in hot regions. When I lighted my fire in the evening it was too dark to see the snakes, which, I presume, had crept along the walls. The altitude of the ruins is nearly eight thousand feet, and so the nights are cold. My fire had attracted the reptiles. When they approached it they found my bed, and discerning the warm blankets, crawled up on them and went to sleep. I extricated myself from the blanket with infinite care. Once on my feet I was no longer afraid of the reptiles, but as I already had specimens of them in my collection, I killed them all and nailed them to the adobe wall with my card on each.

Wonderful Rock Carving.

"On the island of Grand Manan, in the bay of Fundy," writes a correspondent who has been there, "is one of the most beautiful natural rock carvings in the world. It stands at the head of a ledge of rocks jutting into the bay from the foot of one of the immense cliffs at the southern end of Grand Manan. Its shape is that of an almost perfect cross. I shall never forget the first view I had of it. At the back of the cliff, several hundred feet above the sea level, a narrow path leads through dark, overhanging pines. Stepping out of this darkness, almost upon the edge of the cliff, into the brilliancy of a sunlit day, I saw below me the bright spray dashing up against the foot of a cross, and, perched on the top of the holy emblem, a snow-white seagull, all the whiter for the bright sunlight on its feathers. The effect was exquisite, magical. The cross, with its white gull, rose out of the water, as if to symbolize the peace which awaited the storm-tossed mariner in his homing harbor. I am sure that had any vessel from any one of the Latin countries sailed past at that moment the crew would at sight of the cross have sunk on their knees in prayer. All along the foot of the cliffs the sea has beaten in the shore and has formed strange rock shapes. None of these are as beautiful as the Southern Cross. But it is not a little curious that at the very opposite end of the island is a rock shaped exactly like a bishop's miter, and called the Bishop. Further up the bay is a rock shaped like a man's head with a cowl, and called the Friar's Head."

Dawson City's Fire Dogs.

There is in Dawson City one of the most remarkable fire brigades in the world. The engine is drawn by a team of dogs, and the sight of this team driving through the streets of Dawson City, with the fire engine trailing behind, is one of the most unique exhibitions in Alaska. The way the horses jump into their places when the alarm sounds in an American enginehouse has always been a source of pride to the citizen spectator. The dogs are not a bit less active and intelligent than the horses. The instant the alarm sounds in the fire house of a Dawson City brigade, the dogs are alert, and when the number of strokes has been given which announces the calling out of the brigade, the clever animals immediately spring into the place where their collars are ready to be snapped into position. A few seconds later they are dashing through the streets of Dawson City at full tilt, dragging the fire apparatus at their heels, and tearing along in response to the cracking of the whips of the drivers, as though they fully realized the importance of their duties. When the brigade turns out the streets of Dawson City are sure to be lined with spectators, for the people never tire of watching their dog team dash through the town. It is about the first thing to which a new arrival is introduced when Dawson attractions are on exhibition.—Correspondence Washington Post.

Horses' Sense of Smell.

The horse will leave musty hay untouched in his bin, however hungry. He will not drink water objectionable to his questioning sniff, or from a bucket which some odor makes offensive, however thirsty. His intelligent nose will widen, quiver and query over the daintiest bit offered by the fairest hands, with coaxing that would make a mortal shut his eyes and swallow a nauseous mouthful at a gulp. A mare is never satisfied by either sight or whinny that her colt is really her own until she has a clear nasal certificate to the fact. A blind horse will not allow the approach of any stranger without showing signs of anger not safely to be disregarded. This distinction is evidently made by his sense of smell at a considerable distance. Blind horses, as a rule, will gallop wildly about a pasture without striking the surrounding fence. The sense of smell informs them of its proximity. Others will, when loosened from the stable, go direct to the gate or bars opened to their accustomed feeding grounds, and, when desiring to return after hours of careless wandering, will distinguish one outlet and patiently await its opening. The odor of that particular part of the fence is their pilot to it. The horse in browsing or, while gathering herbage with its lips is guided in its choice of proper food entirely by its nostrils. Blind horses do not make mistakes in their diet.—The Horse and Stable.

Wonders of Howe's Cave.

Howe's cave is situated thirty-nine miles from Albany, New York, and after the Luray cave, Virginia, and the Mammoth cave, Kentucky, is probably the most remarkable cavern known. The entrance is about fifty feet above the valley, and the rock chambers known as the reception room, Washington hall, the bridal chamber, and the chapel, are successively reached. Then the Harlequin tunnel is traversed and the visitor passes through Cataract hall, Ghost room and Music hall. The Stygian lake is ten feet deep and is thirty by twenty feet in extent. Fine stalagmites appear both above and below the lake. The lake is crossed in a small boat, and a path, which begins at Plymouth Rock, the landing place, and follows a small brook, traverses the chambers and passages known as the Devil's Gateway, Museum, Geological room, Uncle Tom's cabin, Giant's study, Pirates' cave, Rocky mountains and valley of Jehoshaphat. Then the winding way is succeeded by the rotunda. The stalactites and stalagmites are abundant and beautiful. The cave was discovered by Lester Howe, for whom it was named, in 1842. He penetrated it to a distance of eleven or twelve miles, it is said, but visitors do not generally go farther than about four miles. It is also called the Otsgaragee cave, and is considered one of the wonders of the continent.

Dog Hospitals.

This is the time of the year when the hospitals for dogs in the large cities are busiest. One such in New York is crowded. Here, says the Evening Post, all the diseases inherent in dogs for contagious complaints and cases for harmless ailments. Under no consideration are the two cases ever allowed to mingle. A number of the dogs are steady boarders; their masters either are out of town or do not want the care of them during the cold weather. After their exercise the dogs are fed and brushed, and in some cases treated to vapor baths. Aside from broken legs, distemper and complaints resultant from over-feeding are most numerous. A regular diet is enforced in the latter case, and after a time the animal recovers. Of homesick dogs there are not a few, and in rare instances these have to be sent back before their treatment is completed.

The windows are gay with new novels that shine
In bindings of wonderful hue;
They are wondrously fair as they stand there in line
To tempt any one who may view.
There are books about fairies
And big dictionaries
And histories grave and the rest—
Yet of all the wise prints,
Tales of practical hints,
My grandmother's cook book seems best.

When stone bruises came to my juvenile heel
It told how to conquer the pain,
And how to make soap or apply lemon peel
To remove some insidious stain.
What to do, it portrayed,
For a drowning man's aid,
And how to make blackberry wine;
And how to clean paint
And cure people who faint—
My grandmother's cook book was fine.

No frivolous poems! No fiction to fill
Our lives with a vague discontent!
No long, prosy essays! 'Twas written with skill;
The author said just what he meant.
Of cooking, 'tis true,
What my grandmother knew,
'Twas beyond any volume to state,
But for hot drops and such,
When we'd eaten too much,
My grandmother's cook book was great.

Nervous Women

are ailing women. When a woman has some female trouble she is certain to be nervous and wretched.

With many women the monthly suffering is so great that they are for days positively insane, and the most diligent efforts of ordinary treatment are unavailing.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound comes promptly to the relief of these women. The letters from women cured by it proves this. This paper is constantly printing them.

The advice of Mrs. Pinkham should also be secured by every nervous woman. This costs nothing. Her address is Lynn, Mass.

FALLING HAIR

Save Your Hair with Shampoos of Cuticura SOAP

And light dressings of CUTICURA, purest of emollient skin cures. This treatment at once stops falling hair, removes crusts, scales, and dandruff, soothes irritated, itching surfaces, stimulates the hair follicles, supplies the roots with energy and nourishment, and makes the hair grow upon a sweet, wholesome, healthy scalp when all else fails.

Millions of Women

Use CUTICURA SOAP exclusively for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and healing, red, rough, and sore hands, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and chafings, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, and especially mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. No amount of persuasion can induce those who have once used it to use any other, especially for preserving and purifying the skin, scalp, and hair of infants and children. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients, and the most refreshing of flower odors. No other medicated soap ever compounded is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines, in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, viz., TWENTY-FIVE CENTS, the BEST skin and complexion soap, the BEST toilet and BEST baby soap in the world.

All that has been said of CUTICURA SOAP may be said with even greater emphasis of CUTICURA Ointment, the most delicate, and yet most effective of emollients, and greatest of skin cures. Its use in connection with CUTICURA SOAP (as per directions around each package), in the "ONE NIGHT CURE FOR SORE HANDS," in the "INSTANT RELIEF TREATMENT FOR DISFIGURING ITCHINGS AND IRRITATIONS," and in many uses too numerous to mention, is sufficient to prove its superiority over all other preparations for the skin.

Cuticura The Set, $1.25 Complete External and Internal Treatment for every Humor, consisting of CUTICURA SOAP (25c.), to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales and soften the thickened cuticle, CUTICURA OINTMENT (50c.), to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal, and CUTICURA RESOLVENT (50c.), to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, and humiliating skin, scalp, and blood humors, with loss of hair, when all else fails. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston. "All about the Skin, Scalp, and Hair," free.

CONGRESS

RESUME OF THE WEEK'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate.

Washington, Feb. 13. — The final week's discussion of the pending financial bill was begun in the senate yesterday. The speakers were two Republicans, Mr. Elkins of West Virginia and Mr. Wolcott of Colorado, and one Populist, Mr. Butler of North Carolina. Mr. Elkins advocated the passage of the present senate measure in a brief but forcible argument. Mr. Wolcott, chairman of the international commission of 1897, spoke for the Republicans who adhere to bimetallism, and his speech, earnest and eloquent, was accorded unusual attention. Mr. Butler closed the argument for the day advocating the issuing of paper currency by the government.

The House.

An important bill was passed by the house yesterday which makes universally applicable the law that now permits the transit of goods in bond through certain ports of the United States. Under it goods in bond can be shipped through any portion of the territory of the United States to foreign ports. It is principally designed to give the transportation companies of the United States a share of the transcontinental trade to the Orient. The bill also repeals the law of March 1, 1895, prohibiting the shipment of goods in bond to the Mexican free zone. The latter provision was fought by Mr. Stevens of Texas. The remainder of the day was occupied in passing the private pension bills favorably acted upon at last Friday night's session and in District of Columbia legislation.

The Senate.

Washington, Feb. 14. — The finance bill consideration continued all day. Two great speeches were made, one in favor of the bill and the other in favor of the substitute. The first was delivered by Senator Allison of Iowa, chairman of the finance committee. The other was delivered by Senator Jones of Nevada. He declared the bill was vicious and unwarranted, conferring too great power upon national banks and fastening the country to a gold currency. He discussed the question from a historical and philosophic view point. To-day the senate will begin the consideration of the bill and amendments under the ten-minute rule.

The Senate.

Washington, Feb. 15. — Throughout its session yesterday the senate had the financial bill under discussion. After 2 o'clock the debate proceeded under the ten-minute rule and the times became spirited and interesting. Late in the afternoon a test vote, indicating approximately the majority on the proposed bill, was taken. Mr. Chandler of New Hampshire offered an amendment to authorize the president to appoint commissioners to any international bimetallic conference that might be called, and it was defeated by a vote of 45 to 23. The Chandler proposition out of the way the discussion proceeded on the amendment brought in by the finance committee providing that the provisions of the bill are not intended to place any obstacles in the way of international bimetallism. The Democratic senators arraigned the Republicans for reporting the amendment, declaring they were insincere, and the proposition was intended to hoodwink the people and catch votes. No vote on the amendment was reached. The final votes on the amendments and the bill will be taken some time to-day.

The House.

It was the intention of the Republican leaders of the house to call up the Porto Rico tariff bill to-day but there was such a demand for time to discuss various questions during the general debate on the legislative and judicial appropriation bill, which was called up yesterday, that Mr. Payne gave notice that he would allow the Porto Rican bill to go over until Monday. The debate upon the legislative bill yesterday strayed far from the bill, touching the question of government deposits in national banks, reckless expenditures for pensions, and, finally, drifting into the question of election methods in Missouri. Mr. Bartholdt of Missouri raised the latter question by attacking the Nesbitt law, and provoked a long reply from Mr. Benton of Missouri, who in turn aroused Mr. Pearson of Missouri. Some very caustic things were said on both sides.

The Senate.

Washington, Feb. 16. — The senate substitute for the house currency bill was passed by the senate yesterday by the decisive majority of 29. Prior to the final passage of the bill amendments were considered under the ten-minute rule. Only two of these amendments were adopted, one offered by the finance committee keeping the door open to international bimetallism, and one by Mr. Nelson of Minnesota, providing for national banks with $25,000 capital in towns of not more than 4,000 inhabitants. The vote taken on the various amendments offered were practically along party lines. Mr. Chandler of New Hampshire voted for the bimetallic amendment but against the bill. Mr. Caffery of Louisiana and Mr. Lindsay of Kentucky voted against the committee amendment but for the bill. Mr. Kyle of South Dakota was the only senator who did not vote and was not paired. The free silver substitute offered by Mr. Jones, the leader of the Democratic side was defeated by a majority of 19, the vote being 47 to 28.

The bill as passed consists of ten sections. It provides that the dollar of 25.8-10 grains of gold, nine-tenths fine, shall be the standard unit of value and that all forms of United States money shall be maintained at a parity with it; and that treasury notes and greenbacks shall be redeemable in gold. The secretary of the treasury is to set apart a fund of $150,000,000 in gold for the redemption of these notes and to maintain this fund at a figure not below $100,000,000; he is empowered to sell bonds of the United States bearing interest at not exceeding 3 per cent. It shall also be the duty of the secretary of the treasury as fast as standard silver dollars are coined to retire an equal amount of the treasury notes and to issue silver certificates against the silver coined. Under certain provisions gold certificates shall be issued against the gold held in the treasury. No United States notes or treasury notes shall be issued in denominations of less than $10 and no silver certificates in denominations of more than $10. The secretary of the treasury is also authorized to refund the bonded debt of the United States in thirty-year bonds bearing 2 per cent interest, the principal and interest of these bonds to be paid in gold. The 2 per cent bonds shall be issued at not less than par. Any national bank, by depositing with the United States bonds of this country shall be permitted to issue circulating notes to the face value of the bonds deposited, no bank being allowed to issue circulating notes in excess of the amount of the paid-in capital stock of the bank.

After the passage of the financial bill the senate made the Hawaiian government bill the unfinished business.

The House.

The house completed twenty-six of the 124 pages of the legislative and judicial appropriation bill without amendment. During the general debate which closed at 4 o'clock a variety of topics were touched upon. Mr. Boutelle of Illinois, Mr. Miers of Indiana and Mr. Shawalter of Pennsylvania discussed the Philippine question; Mr. Grosvenor of Ohio and Mr. Gillett of Massachusetts, civil service reform; Mr. Driggs of New York, pensions, and Mr. Underwood of Alabama, his resolution to repeal the fifth amendment to the constitution. The legislative bill probably will be passed to-day.

The Senate.

Washington, Feb. 17.—The house yesterday indulged in its annual joke by striking from the legislative appropriation bill all provision for the civil service commission. This action is taken each year in committee of the whole, where the members do not go on record, and the provision is then invariably restored when the bill gets back in the house where members have to respond to their names upon a roll call. The votes to strike out was 75 to 67. To-day the house will reverse this action as usual on an aye and no vote. Most of the time of the house yesterday beyond that occupied on the discussion of the civil service law was devoted to attacks on the speech made by Mr. Sims of Tennessee on Wednesday, in which he furnished some figures of the pension office showing the number of applications for pensions filed by soldiers of the volunteer regiments engaged in the Spanish war to show that the Northern soldiers were much more clamorous in that regard than the Southern ones, and attributing this to the debauching of public sentiment in the North on the pension question. Mr. Pearre of Maryland raised the storm by a reference to those figures and the statement that hundreds of Massachusetts soldiers who never smelled powder had applied for pensions. This brought out an indignant reply from Mr. Fitzgerald of Massachusetts, who detailed the record of the Massachusetts volunteers in the late war. He was followed by others who defended the records of the soldiers from their several states. Mr. Hepburn of Iowa vigorously assailed Mr. Sims. Considerable temper was shown.

When the session opened announcement of the receipt of the currency bill from the senate was made, and on motion of Mr. Overstreet of Indiana, by unanimous consent, the senate amendments were disagreed to. The speaker appointed Messrs. Overstreet of Indiana, Brosius of Pennsylvania and Cox of Tennessee conferees. The house then went into committee of the whole on the legislative appropriation bill.

The Senate.

Consideration of the financial measure having been concluded, discussion of the Philippine question was resumed in the senate yesterday. Mr. McEnery of Louisiana strongly opposed the permanent acquisition of the islands and believed the United States ought to relinquish them as soon as the authority of this country had been asserted. Mr. Stewart took a prominent position in favor of the admission of the products of any of the island possessions of the United States free of duty.

The bill providing a form of government for the Territory of Hawaii was read, but beyond that formality nothing was done with it.

A SUBSIDY ROBBERY.

IN THE GUISE OF AIDING THE NATION'S COMMERCE.

Where the Hanna-Payne Ship Grant Will Go if Congress Passes the Bill—One Company Will Get the Lions' Share.

If the Ship Subsidy bill becomes a law, the lion's share of the bounty will go to a single company. Under the provisions of the measure, the International Navigation company will be entitled to receive a subsidy for twenty years of more than $2,850,000 a year. In the aggregate, this company's bounties will exceed $57,000,000! A single company, operating for private gain, will thus take from the national treasury $57,000,000 of tax-raised money. The International Navigation company now has eight ships under the American flag, ten ships under foreign flags, and four ships under contract for building in foreign shipyards. It is to receive in twenty years $57,000,000 of the people's money as a gratuity to fatten the dividends of its shareholders. On the fast steamers of the International Navigation company the bounty to be earned annually will be more than ten per cent of the vessel's cost when new. The bounties will be large enough to pay all the salaries and wages of the officers and crews who man the ships. It will do more than that. It will be about large enough to meet the payroll and to pay for the ship's supplies. Already the government pays the International Navigation company $757,580 a year for carrying mails across the Atlantic. Only four ships of the line are employed as mail carriers. If the bill becomes a law it will mean that the United States will pay more to Senator Hanna's bounty beggars every year than Great Britain, Germany, Russia, Austria and Spain combined, pay in subsidies to their merchant marine. And the largest part of their subsidies are paid for carrying the mails. Germany pays only $1,694,620; Russia, $1,163,157; Austria, $172,249; Spain, $1,629,927; Great Britain, $5,762,572.—Verdict.

GREAT FORTUNES.

The new Duke of Westminster inherits what is said to be the greatest fortune in England, represented by an income of $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 a year from landed estates in London. It is estimated that if he should live to the age of the late duke the renewals of the London leases will bring his income up to twelve or fourteen million dollars.

This estimate may be affected by future circumstances. If Great Britain continues her policy of imperialism, and rashly engages in foreign wars it may be necessary to resort to a land tax, in which case the Westminster estates may be less profitable. But at any rate, even on the highest estimate, the richest peer in England can only hope to reach in fifty years an income equal to that already enjoyed by the richest Standard Oil magnate in this country.

In both countries the methods of acquiring these great fortunes are the same. In England the landowners, being also owners of the government, have exempted themselves from their share of the public burdens except in the matter of the income tax, which yielded last year $85,000,000.

In this country the monopolists, owning the state governments as far as was necessary and the federal government occasionally, have exempted themselves alike from private competition and public control and from any adequate share in the taxation, with results more than matching those of English landowners.

It has taken 300 years of the growth of London to build up the Westminster property, while the far richer property of our Standard Oil barons is the growth of only thirty years—and it was never growing faster than now.—New York World.

CHARITY NEEDED AT HOME.

What is the situation in this, our country, that it should encourage us with the belief that we are in position to do house cleaning for the Filipinos? Let us see what a bird's eye view reveals to us:

Thousands of children dying every year in our large cities for want of pure air and sufficient food. Would it not be well for us to regenerate ourselves so as to prevent this child-slaughter, before starting in on the Filipinos?

Thousands of women forced into lives of shame every year, in order to obtain means of support. Would it not be well for us to regenerate ourselves to as to prevent this sale of women's bodies, before starting in on the Filipinos?

Thousands of men annually degraded into criminals or vagrants, thus becoming a menace to all the members of society because of irregular employment. Would it not be well to regenerate ourselves so as to prevent this degradation of human lives, before starting in on the Filipinos?

Half the wealth of the country in the hands of a few hundred men, while half our seventy-five millions of people are living a hand-to-mouth existence, hardly knowing one day where they are going to get food the next. Would it not be well for us to regenerate ourselves so as to prevent these gross conditions of inequality, which if not changed must result in the death of this republic, as they have resulted in the death of all other republics, before starting in on the Filipinos?

Monopoly in control of the judicial executive and legislative branches of government, bribing jurors, corrupting legislators and appointing judges and senators. Political bossism under which corruption grows like the Russian thistle. Would it not be well for us to regenerate ourselves, so as to correct these evil conditions of our own government before we start in the business of governing the Filipinos?

IT WILL NOT DOWN.

Secretary Gage's report to congress, attempting to explain his favoritism to the Standard Oil's National City Bank of New York is the sort of campaign document for which our campaigners might have prayed, says the San Francisco Star. It is not always easy to convince the public that a partisan charge against an opponent is true, but where that opponent admits his guilt, and furnishes documentary evidence with which to prove it, the public has no choice but to concur in his verdict.

Secretary Gage permitted some very remarkable letters to go to congress. Probably his experience as a banker and his inexperience as a public man caused him to fail to realize how they would impress the public. The evidence shows that of late he has utilized the long-distance telephone in discussing matters of state with the New York banking trust. The telephone tells no tales. But some letters have been written and are in the possession of congress, and the following is a sample of the reading they furnish:

Under date of June 5, 1897, A. B. Hepburn, vice-president of the National City Bank, wrote Secretary Gage asking that his bank enjoy the free use of government funds, adding: "Of course, the bank is very strong, and if you will take pains to look at our list of directors you will see that we also have very great political claims in view of what was done during the canvass last year."

Among the directors of the National City Bank who had "very great political claims" were William Rockefeller, of the Standard Oil company; H. O. Havemeyer, president of the Sugar trust; Robert Bacon, of the firm of J. Pierpont Morgan; H. Walter Webb, one of the Vanderbilts and vice-president of the New York Central, and Jacob Schiff, of the Union Pacific syndicate.

This group of men represented some four million dollars of contributions to Mark Hanna's campaign fund. It is needless to say that they asked for and received their dividends on this generous contribution. An examination of the statements of the National City Bank shows how the government deposits jumped from $200,000 on May 14, 1897, three weeks before the writing of the letter above quoted, to $29,000,000 in September, 1899.

These are matters of public record, and show that the political pull which this bank has exerted with the administration has given it such prestige that it is now the most powerful banking institution in the country. From a bank of no great fame, four years ago, it now has deposits of over $100,000,000, on which it reaps profits of over $4,000,000 a year on a capital which until recently was only $1,000,000.

This octopus of banks could have bought and sold the United States bank of Jackson's day ten times over. Never has there been more direct proof of the McKinley administration's subserviency to the money power which secured its election, and which is about to try to purchase another term.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Men have a right to believe what they please. Any man has a right to believe, for instance, that McKinley is unfriendly to the trusts, although they supported him in 1896, and are actively working to secure his renomination and re-election. Any man has a right to believe that McKinley is unfriendly to the trusts, notwithstanding this evidence, but do you think the man who would think so, capable of self government to say nothing of helping to govern the Filipinos?

The paper trust has increased the cost of the white paper used by the newspapers of the country, thirty-three per cent in three months, and the result is that it has converted some rabid protectionist, Republican papers into advocates of free trade—in paper. The editors of these papers, in their sober moments, now admit that the tariff does have something to do with trusts.

For two months, 1,500 men hitherto employed at Cramp's ship yard, have been on a strike for ten per cent advance in wages to make partial return to them for an advance of twenty per cent in the cost of living. These men are of the opinion that the widely touted prosperity is cramped in their case.—Ex.

President Gates of the American Steel and Wire Company, better known as the steel trust, testified before the Industrial commission, that his concern sold goods more cheaply abroad than at home. He did not, however, consider that a reason why the tariff on steel and wire should be abolished.

TRUE AS EVER.

Ez fer war, I call it murder—
There you hev it plain an' flat;
I don't want to go no furder
Than my Testyment fer that.
God hez sed so plump an' fairly,
It's ez long ez it is broad,
An' you've got to git up airly
Ef you want to take in God.
'Taint your eppyletts an' feathers
Make the thing a grain more right;
'Taint a follerin' your bell-wethers
Will excuse ye in His sight.
Ef you take a sword an' dror it,
An' go stick a feller thru,
Guv'ment ain't no answer for it—
God'll send the bill to you.
Wut's the use o' meetin'-goin'
Every Sabbath, wet or dry,
Ef it's right to go a-mowin'
Feller-men like oats an' rye?
I dunno but what it's pooty
Trainin' round in bob-tail coats,
But it's curous Christian dooty,
This 'ere cuttin' folks' throats.

BROST ACQUITTED.

Eden Valley Murder Case Resulting as Was Expected.

Litchfield, Minn., Feb. 18.—The jury in the case of Charles Brost, charged with complicity in the murder of Carl Miller, returned a verdict of not guilty. Carl Miller was arrested some time ago, charged with criminal intimacy with the wife of Caspar Schmidt, a farmer living near Eden Valley. Miller was lodged in jail at Eden Valley, and was found one night dead, hanging from the wall of his cell. It was at first supposed that Miller had hung himself, but later the theory of murder gained credence, and Charles Brost, Philip Roml, Caspar Schmidt, William Klekbush and John Dougherty were indicted for the alleged crime by the grand jury. A separate trial was demanded and Brost was called first. The acquittal of Brost will probably mean the dismissal of the cases against the other defendants.

NORTHERN PACIFIC WRECK.

Engine Rolls 200 Feet Down an Embankment.

Helena, Mont., Feb. 18.—Owing to the icy condition of the track train No. 54, on the Northern Pacific became unmanageable just after crossing the main divide west of Helena, and soon after reaching Iron Ridge tunnel jumped the track. Owing to the impetus of the train the engine, after leaving the track, rolled down the mountain side 200 feet, and the rest of the train is piled up in the tunnel. The engineer, fireman and one brakeman were badly bruised and cut. Brakeman Hurenden, who was on top of the train trying to stop it, is missing, and is doubtless in the debris. The wounded were all brought to the Helena hospital. It will take twenty-four hours to clear the tracks, and through trains will be run over the Butte stub.

BLAZE AT BOWDLE.

Serious Scorching for a South Dakota Town.

Aberdeen, S. D., Feb. 18. — Bowdle, S. D., was visited by a disastrous fire last night which deprived that city of one of her best business blocks. About 9 o'clock fire was discovered in the basement of T. H. Ward's general store, and every available effort was used to confine the fire to that building, but a strong northwest wind soon swept the flames into adjoining buildings and out of control, and the entire block was completely destroyed. The estimated loss is $100,000, about half covered by insurance.

PUPIL ARRESTED.

Was Caught Smoking a Cigarette—Other Prosecutions.

Winona, Minn., Feb. 18. — Superintendent Tormey, of the city schools, has caused the arrest of Rollo Clement, a minor pupil, for smoking a cigarette on the street, and also the arrest of Mrs. Anna Milanowski, a storekeeper, for selling tobacco to another minor. Mr. Tormey is making an effort to suppress the use of tobacco by minor school children.

FORCED TO GO HOME.

Forty-Eight Chinamen Start for the Coast.

Fargo, N. D., Feb. 18.—United States Marshal Haggart leaves to-day with twelve deputies in charge of forty-eight Chinamen who were ordered deported by Judge Amidon for violation of the exclusion act. The men will go in two special coaches over the Northern Pacific, and will sail on the Olympia from Port Townsend Feb. 22.

Watertown Land Office.

Watertown, S. D., Feb. 18.—The business of the land office for the month of January was the largest in total receipts of any since the present administration. There were 54 homestead entries, representing 6,856 acres; 34 final homestead proofs, 4,920 acres; 31 cash entries, 4,228 acres. The total cash receipts for the month were $11,600.

Cold in South Dakota.

Deadwood, S. D., Feb. 18. — The weather here for the past few days has been exceedingly cold. The thermometer registered 32 degrees below zero yesterday morning at Lead, Rapid City, Bellefourche and Deadwood. A heavy wind is blowing from the north and cattle on the ranges are reported as suffering.

Blow to Normal Schools.

Des Moines, Iowa, Feb. 18. — The normal school bill was defeated in the house—46 to 47. This was the chief bill before the legislature. The preliminary plans were for the establishment of three schools in the state upon the recommendation of the educational association. The action of the house was a surprise.

Charged With Fraud.

Sioux City, Iowa, Feb. 18.—Detective George Lewellyn arrested H. T. Laper, an Ipswich, S. D., saloonkeeper, on a charge of defrauding insurance companies. The claim is that Laper first padded his invoices and that two suspicious fires occurred in his place in rapid succession. Laper was formerly a barber in Minneapolis.

Receiver Appointed.

Sturgis, S. D., Feb. 18.—Samuel G. Sheffield has been appointed by Judge Moore receiver of the Sturgis Water company, and took charge of the affairs of the company yesterday. Mr. Sheffield immediately appointed J. J. Davenport manager under him to look after the company's property.

Assigned to Mission Work.

White Earth, Minn., Feb. 17.—Rev. Father Fidelis Lueking, O. S. B., of St. John's abbey, has been assigned to a new field, St. Joseph, on White Earth reservation. Rev. Father Aloysius, O. S. B., is conducting the Catholic mission work of the reservation.

Fire at Merrill.

Merrill, Wis., Feb. 18. — Fire destroyed a building owned by the Norway estate. The lower story was occupied by a general store and the upper story by offices. Loss, $25,000.

The University Daily.

St. Paul, Feb. 18.—The committee appointed for the purpose has made all preliminary arrangements for the issuance of the new state university daily. The paper will be called the Minnesota Daily, and its first appearance will be on March 27.

Old Settlers' Reunion.

Plainview, Minn., Feb. 18. — The early settlers of Greenwood Prairie held their annual reunion at this place. An old-fashioned dinner was served to over 200 people.

PASSENGER TRAIN WRECKED.

The Omaha Twilight Limited Collides With Freight Cars on a Siding—Two Trainmen From St. Paul Injured.

Duluth, Minn., Feb. 20.—The Omaha's "Twilight Limited" from St. Paul, due to arrive at Duluth at 10 o'clock last night, met with a serious accident at Gordon, Wis., at 9 o'clock. William Frazer, engineer, and William Bubkley, fireman, both of St. Paul, were quite seriously injured. The latter is in a critical condition. No passengers were injured. The engine crew were brought to Superior and taken to St. Mary's hospital by special train. The train was running thirty-five miles an hour at Gordon; when it suddenly ran into a sidetrack, colliding with a number of freight cars that were standing on the siding. Before the collision the passenger train had left the side track and it cannot be learned whether the switch was open or whether the train left the main track and straddled the siding. A special train was sent down from here to bring the passengers up. The engine was demolished.

UNIQUE SUIT FOR DIVORCE.

North Dakota Judge Has Under Advisement a Case in Which the Parties Are Lawyers and Business Partners.

Fargo, N. D., Feb. 20.—North Dakota presents the unique spectacle of a man and wife, both lawyers and business partners, seeking divorce. It is the case of Taylor Crum vs. Ida M. Crum, which has been on trial here, and is now under advisement. Some years ago Mrs. Crum started divorce proceedings, which action was followed by an assault on Crum, who is a cripple, by Mrs. Crum's brother. The proceedings were finally dropped. Judge Lauder has intimated that he will grant the decree. Mrs. Crum has filed a cross bill for alimony.

GRANT THE NEW PETITION.

Marshall County, Iowa, Supervisors Declare Saloon Men Had More Than Enough Signatures.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Feb. 20. — The first ruling in the state in the matter of new petitions on consent for operating saloons under the mulct law was made Saturday, the county board of supervisors declaring, after four days' canvass, that the petition recently filed by the saloon men contained seventy-two bona fide signatures more than the required majority. The opposition has contested the petition from the start on various technical points and served notice of appeal to the courts. All of the eighteen saloons are running.

BIG BLAZE AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Fire Does Damage to the Amount of $135,000.

Minneapolis, Feb. 20. — The large building on Fifth avenue south and Third street, Minneapolis, occupied by the Pittsburg Plate Glass company, was badly damaged by fire Saturday night. A total loss of probably $135,000 was caused. Of this amount all but $10,000 is on the extensive stock carried by the company. The fire was discovered a few minutes before 8 o'clock. The blaze spread with amazing rapidity and before the firemen had fairly got down to business the fire was through the roof and the entire second story was burned out. For a time it looked as if there would be nothing left of the large structure and its valuable contents, but when the fire was extinguished the walls stood, to the surprise of many, and the damage to the ground floor was found to be much less than anticipated.

SHOT THE GIRLS' FATHER.

Young Man Has an Altercation With and Kills His Sweetheart's Father.

Ottumwa, Iowa, Feb. 20. — Leslie Eastburn, a twenty-one-year-old boy, shot Jasper Sutton, an aged and respected citizen of Bloomfield, yesterday, three bullets penetrating the abdomen and causing almost instant death. Eastburn called at Sutton's home to take his eighteen-year-old daughter Alice to church. The father met him at the door and ordered him away. An altercation ensued, and Sutton followed Eastburn to the road. Finally weapons were drawn by both men but Eastburn fired first, the other man falling before he could raise his weapon. Eastburn gave himself up, going into Bloomfield's house and consoling the daughter until the officer arrived.

SUPPOSED DEAD MAN ALIVE.

Frank Crane Returns From Travels to Stop Family Litigation.

Sioux City, Iowa, Feb. 20. — Frank Crane of Wakefield, Neb., who disappeared ten years ago and was supposed to have been murdered, has turned up alive. He gives no cause for his disappearance. He has traveled in Central and South America. He returns to stop some family litigation.

Venerable Badger Dead.

Milwaukee, Feb. 20.—Word was received from Muskegon last night of the death of Capt. A. J. Langworthy at the age of 84 years. Capt. Langworthy was chief of the Milwaukee fire department in 1840, and was sheriff of Milwaukee county during 1859-60. He organized a company of the Second Wisconsin regiment that served in the battle of Bull Run and was president of the Wisconsin Association of Bull Run Survivors in 1898. He was also a prominent Odd Fellow.

Industries for Fairmont.

Fairmont, Minn., Feb. 20.—Two new enterprises are soon to be added to Fairmont's resources—a brickyard and a canning factory. The land for the former has been purchased.

Fire in a Winona School.

Winona, Minn., Feb. 17. — The first serious fire in any Winona school buildings occurred when the Jackson public school building was damaged to the extent of $2,500. Fire started from an overheated furnace pipe.

New Charter.

Northfield, Minn., Feb. 20. — The charter commission has drafted a new city charter which the voters will accept or reject at the coming spring election.

Struck by a Train.

Faribault, Minn., Feb. 20. — Gideon Tuseaul, while driving home west of the city, was struck by a train. He was badly injured. The team was carried several blocks and was thrown off of a high bridge.

MINNESOTA ITEMS

Hanna & Co. buy an interest in Minnesota iron mines.

Bemidji is becoming metropolitan and is to have a bar association.

The baking-powder law has been declared unconstitutional by Judge Loerren.

The Duluth council canvassed the vote and declared T. W. Hugo elected mayor.

The governor has suspended Gebhard Bongard, the missing treasurer of Carver county.

Fire destroyed one of the warehouses of the Northwestern Grass Twine company at St. Paul.

O. C. Beck, a resident of Winona since 1858, and a leading hardware merchant, died of bronchitis.

Ada business men will build telephone lines to connect that place with points on the Moorhead Northern line.

Mormon elders are again at work in Winona, but are not meeting with much success in their attempts at proselyting.

Reports of fire insurance companies that operate in Minnesota show that a net loss from last year's business of $1,500,000.

The matter of choosing a site for the new Polk county court house is giving rise to considerable discussion in Crookston.

It is learned that John E. Searles of [illegible] of Duluth has just obtained title to the West Duluth car works.

The Knudson-Ferguson Fruit company of Duluth has filed amended articles of incorporation. The capital stock is increased to $100,000.

The new M. E. church at Akeley was dedicated by the Rev. Dr. Forbes, presiding elder of Duluth. The edifice cost about $2,000 and is debt free.

The Brainerd & Northern railroad announces an increase in wages for nearly all employes, to take effect March 1. The average is about 5 per cent.

Robert Boese, a farmer living five miles south of Taylor, died suddenly while riding home with neighbors. Heart failure is supposed to have been the cause.

The saloon of George Westerman at Faribault was entered through a side door by burglars, who rifled the cash register and took what money was in it, a small amount. Some goods were also taken.

The farm house of Ole H. Bakken, three miles west of Henning, was destroyed by fire. The family barely escaped with their lives, but all the household goods were consumed. Loss $600; no insurance.

Charles McMillan of Stillwater has settled his suit against the estate of the late Isaac Staples, receiving $1,500 for the balance of his logging contract. This is the last of the important actions against the estate.

The flour war which has been on the past week between the Bay State Milling company, Winona, and the Listman Mill company of La Crosse has taken a new turn. Flour in consequence in both cities has dropped $1 on the barrel.

Frank Frankovis of Fergus Falls swallowed a Mauser cartridge knife blade, but his physicians believe that it will do him no harm. The blade is about two inches in length, a bit of steel almost exactly like a Mauser bullet forming a sort of handle for it.

M. Toye and Frank Johnson, applicants for a hot water heating franchise at Winona, have refused the grant made them by the city council, on the ground that the exactions imposed in the way of cheap city heating and a tax on the gross earnings are too severe.

A new bank is about to be established in the village of Battle Lake, the firm of Head & McClellan of Princeton subscribing one-half of the stock and citizens of the village the other half. The bank will be a private institution and will be capitalized at $10,000.

Robert Allen Blakely was recently arrested for the alleged unlawful selling of liquor to Indians at Leech Lake. He was given a hearing before Court Commissioner Griffin at Detroit and bound over in the sum of $300. This amount he failed to raise and was committed to jail at Duluth.

Alfred Anderson, a farmer of Pike Creek, while crossing the track near the brick yards at Little Falls with his team, was struck by the train and instantly killed. He had one arm taken off and his head was split open. Another man on the wagon with him was slightly injured. One of the horses was slightly injured.

A deed involving a large transfer of timber lands was filed at Duluth from John and George D. Strong of Rockwood, Mich., to Mitchell & McClure. The property is described as being in section 63, town 12, range 13 and section 64, town 12 range 13. The consideration is $209,912 and the mineral rights are reserved.

The state is doing a rushing twine business and Warden Reeve is confident that the entire twine output at the prison will be disposed of long before the harvest commences in this state. Prices have been fixed less than a week and Mr. Reeve stated that all the unmixed manila and sisal twine has been sold.

Bartholomew Lisecki was held up at Winona by two young men and relieved of $1.40 and a watch. Suspicion fell on John Erpelding and August Wycoski, and they were both arrested. Wycoski made a confession of the affair and said he did the deed. Erpelding owned up to receiving part of the booty.

Fletcher Walker and C. B. Marsh, representing the Red River Lumber company of Akeley, appeared before the Hubbard county commissioners and made a plea for postponement of action for one week on the petition for incorporating Akeley as a village. The officials circulating the counter petition seem to have had signatures withdrawn from the former one to render it void. The company will fight the incorporation as long as the land outside of the original plat is included, which embraces its lumber yards.

Reports of state banks show 10 per cent profits or better for the last year.

Tabooes Women.

Frankfort, Ky.—A member of the Kansas legislature has announced his candidacy for re-election on a platform in opposition to the employment of women about legislative assemblies, or, for that matter, in any branch of the state government.

Russia's Cotton Industry.

St. Petersburg—The annual consumption of cotton by mills in Russia has been about 200,000 tons for several years, and the industry is growing steadily in importance there.

State of Minnesota, County of Red Lake, ss.

I, Adam Zeh, county auditor, in and for said county of Red Lake, in the state of Minnesota, do solemnly swear that the above and foregoing list of real estate taxes and penalties for the year 1898, delinquent and unpaid on the first Monday in January, 1900, in said county and state, consisting of pages numbered from 1 to 224, both inclusive, is true and correct to the best of my knowledge and belief.

Signed ADAM ZEH,
County Auditor of Red Lake County, Minn.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 20th day of January, A. D. 1900.

JOSEPH PERRAULT,
Clerk of District Court,
Red Lake County, Minn.
(Clerk of the Court Seal.)

District Court, Red Lake County, Minnesota.
Filed this 20th day of January, 1900.

Clerk District Court.

VALUABLE BUILDINGS

Have Been Erected by Y. M. C. A.'s During the Past Year.

In these days of sharp competition when everything has to prove its right to existence and values are fixed on a cold business basis, it may be of interest to some to know what has been taking place in the building line during the last 12 months, and the outlook for the coming 12 in the Young Men's Christian association of this country. The amount and value of property by no means tell the success of the organization; they merely show the strength and permanency.

Most of the Herald's readers are familiar with the successful canvass for $50,000 at Grand Rapids, Mich., shortly after the international convention in that city in May last, largely the work of Secretary Van Vranken, and which left their $110,000 building free from debt. Other cities raising equal or larger amounts were Cincinnati, O., and Cambridge, Mass., whose building in 1897 cost $156,000. Those which cleared their property of debt under $50,000 were Rockford, Ill., Wilmington, Del., Butler, Pa., Montreal, Que., Keene, N. H., Seattle, Wash., Sharpsburg, Pa., Janesville, Wis., Tonawanda, N. Y., Yonkers, N. Y., Baraboo, Wis.

Among the cities which secured new buildings in 1899 may be mentioned Washington, D. C., where the property of the Columbia Athletic club, valued at $125,000, was purchased for $75,000. Subsequent improvements foot up a total cost of $102,000.

Memphis, Tenn., also purchased a club house for $22,500. Other cities coming into possession of club houses were Manchester, N. H., Dallas, Tex., West Side Department, Chicago, Hyde Park Department, Chicago.

Buildings were erected at Keokuk, Ia., Leavenworth, Kan., Newark, O., Salem, Mass., Bristol, R. I., Montclair, N. J., Passaic, N. J., Sacremento, Cal., Mobile, Ala., Kingston, N. Y., Waterloo, Ia., Evanston, Ill., Taunton, Mass., Warwick, N. Y., Oregon iCty, Ore.

Surprising as this record is, the present year bids fair to equal if not exceed it. Scranton, Pa., will build at a cost of $250,000, including lot; Brockton, Mass., $110,000; Springfield, O., $60,000; Jamestown, N. Y., $45,000; New Haven, Conn., $200,000; Macon, Ga., $12,000; Dayton, O., $250,000. Pittston, Pa., Springfield, Mo., Lancaster, Pa., Shamokin, Pa., Westfield, Mass., Kenosha, Wis. Chelsea, Mass., Colorado Springs, Col., Ansonia, Conn.

Such buildings as these as homes for the young men of the nation is an indication of the need and that the need is being met by the business community.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL CENSUS

The following paragraph from the Outlook of New York will interest a great many persons in Grand Forks and other persons in the northwest:

"The Philadelphia Sabbath School association proposes an interesting undertaking, namely, a complete census of Philadelphia's million and a quarter inhabitants, the entire census to be accomplished in a single day. The object of this census is to list all those in that city who attend church or Sunday school services. An advisory committee consists of one clergyman or some other official from each religious denomination. The Sabbath School association has divided Philadelphia into 18 districts and 137 sub districts. For each of these sub districts there will be a chairman, to each of whom a section will be given. These section workers will write the names and residences on cards, with such description as may be needed, and deliver the cards to the sub district chairman, who will make totals of the results, and in turn deliver the information to the district chairman. It is proposed to take the census on the 22nd of February. The pioneer of the endeavor is Mr. Hugh Cork, who has had charge of a similar census in Pittsburg. Mr. Cork says that out of the entire population of Pittsburg only 600 people refused to give the information asked. As results of that census many churches have been able, first, to bring back those who had lapsed from attendance, and, secondly, to gain others who had no particular church allegiance. The Pittsburg census revealed the fact that 25,000 persons had relinquished church attendance."

Thomas Edison used to have Nikola Tesla working for him in his studio near Paris. Tesla came to him one day asking for work, and Edison, who needed help, referred him to the foreman, named Fulton. The latter took the young foreigner on condition that he would work. This Tesla did. For three days and nights he never closed his eyes. At the end of the first fortnight he had not had 48 hours' sleep altogether, and Fulton, the foreman, made him take a rest. He also said to the young man that on account of the strain both had been under they would better have a good meal. Accordingly, the foreman and the student went to a well-known cafe in one of the boulevards and got one of the biggest and thickest steaks possible. It was enormous, and seemed to be overwhelming for two. Besides, the garnishings were liberal and there was enough good wine. Between them, however, they managed to make everything disappear, and then Fulton, turning to Tesla, asked him if there was anything else he would like. "You're out with me, you know, and whatever you want, just order it." Tesla looked vaguely around a minute, as if making up his mind, and then, hesitating, said: "Mr. Fulton, if you don't mind, I would like another steak."

MOODY.

The late evangelist Moody was a firm believer in newspaper advertising. He used to say: I don't believe any man need preach to empty pews if he will only use a little common sense. Advertise. Put a notice in the papers. Stick out a sign. Put out a bill of fare. No church can succeed with only undertakers' signs on it. Don't be afraid. Shock somebody. No matter; we've got to be shocked. Somebody says it isn't dignified. My friends, let dignity go to the winds. That isn't one of the fruits of the Spirit. I notice these reporters don't stop for dignity. When they want anything out of me, they don't hesitate to follow me right into my bedroom. Use the same enterprise in running your meetings that the papers do in their business.—Buffalo (N. Y.) Commercial.

DID NOT KNOW HIS BRAND.

And the Result Was That the Maverick Got in the Wrong Corral.

It all happened in a church not over a mile from the city post office, says the Washington Star. There was a young people's reception afoot, and there was a programme upon which appeared the name of a tenor soloist who is given to scrambled hair, sombreros and neckties that are vociferous. It was getting well along in the evening and the soloist had failed to appear. It so happened that nobody there knew him, and the lady who had engaged him had also failed to appear. Presently one of the men active in greeting the guests noticed a large, picturesque-appearing man enter the church parlor, and after looking carefully around him slide into a seat, beside which he deposited a big sombrero. It then appeared that his hair quite answered the description, also his tie, which was a screaming scarlet. The young manager approached the stranger, sure of his prey, and, bending over him, said, in his most dulcet manner: "The audience has been expressing regret at your nonappearance. Will you now favor us with one of your songs?"

The stranger looked up at the young man with rather a startled air and then blurted out: "Song! Mister, you've rounded up the wrong critter. I don't know G flat from gewhiz. I'm off the reservation, you see, and was wondering what kind of a game was on in here, and came in sociable-like. I—I reckon, mister, these folks ain't got my brand," and he fled into the outer darkness.

RED TAPE IN WASHINGTON.

So Strictly Observed the Carpenter Could Not Clean the Glass Door.

A correspondnt passing hurriedly into the room of the committee on rivers and harbors to see Representative Burton pulled the knob off the door, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"How can I get that fixed, do you think?" asked Burton. "Shall I get the carpenter or the locksmith?"

"The locksmith, I suppose."

"No, sir. Were I to send for the locksmith he would tell me to consult the architect of the capitol. He has no authority to fix doorknobs. Doorknobs are permanent fixtures and are solely within the jurisdiction of the architect of the capitol."

"Do you see that bookcase there?" said Secretary Ellis. "I caused the carpenter to paste some cloth on the inside of the glass doors in order that the books might not show. He did the work, but when he had finished I noted that he had not cleaned the glass before he put the cloth on. The thing looked so disreputable that I asked him why he had not cleaned the glass.

"He told me that the glass was a permanent fixture and that he had no authority to touch it, but that the placing of the cloth upon it was a temporary matter and was entirely within the province of his labors. The whole thing's got to be done all over again."

OFFICIAL BATHTUBS.

From This Account We Learn How the Legislators Indulge in Their Ablutions.

Away down in the basement of the capitol, in the midst of the winding and mysterious passages of this subterranean section, are located the congressional bathrooms, where the statesmen cleanse their cuticles at the expense of Uncle Sam. There are about 15 tubs on the house side, and when congress is in session they are patronized at all hours of the day. The representatives who take their periodic tubbings in the capitol bathrooms are not bound by any particular hour or rule of bathing. They start in at any hour of the day (or night, if the house sits late), and are scrubbed and rubbed down by strong-armed attendants at government expense. The fact that the tubs are almost constantly occupied indicates the extent to which the privilege of a free bath is appreciated. In many of the hotels of the city patronized by congressmen a charge is made for the use of the bath, and the thrifty representative can get around this expense by making his ablutions at the capitol, says the Washington Star.

In both the senate and house wings of the capitol there are barber shops, where statesmen are shaved, and hair tonics, perfumes and soaps furnished by the government, so that if one has a mind to, the usual expenses of the barber shop can be avoided.

Color in Commerce.

The United States consul general in Frankfort says "that it is important to study the taste of people in the matter of color, as well as in regard to shape, in designing goods for a foreign market. Saxon makers of needles drove England out of Brazil by wrapping their goods in pink paper instead of black. Other Germans are catering to the fondness of Russians for red in their dress. France recently learned how distasteful green is to a Chinaman, but it cost a good deal of money to make the discovery."

Tobacco a Necessity.

One of the few things of which the Boers have an inadequate supply is tobacco. While spending millions for guns and ammunition, they neglected to provide themselves with an abundance of the soothing weed. Soldiers positively cannot get along without it. They can easier in many instances dispense with food. An editor in Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal, appreciates the situation. He has made an appeal to the citizens who remain at home to deny themselves tobacco in order that the supply of the men at the front may not be restricted.

GETTING AN ANTIQUE CHEAP.

How a Collector Secured an Old Mahogany Table at Very Small Cost.

When a man becomes a crank on the subject of antiques he will go to any extreme to gain possession of a coveted treasure, says the Philadelphia Record. There is a physician up the northeast way who has the craze, and has it bad. He made a professional call on an old Irish woman the other day, and, as her ailment was not of sufficient severity to keep her from her household duties, he found her in the kitchen washing dishes. His eyes glistened as he saw the table upon which this homely operation was being performed. It was an old decrepit affair on three legs, but it was solid mahogany, with quaint carvings.

"That's a queer sort of a table to be washing dishes on," ventured the doctor.

"Sure, it is that," replied its owner; "an' I wouldn't be bothered wid it at all, at all, if I could afford a new one."

The doctor was all solicitude in a moment. "Why, that's too bad," he said. And then, as though seized with a sudden philanthropic inspiration, he added: "If you will allow me I'll buy you a new table, and I'll take the old one off your hands." Of course, the old woman was only too delighted. The doctor invested two dollars in a common kitchen table, in exchange for which he received the old mahogany one, which had been in the old woman's family for nearly a century.

AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

This Account Says the American Pavilion Is a Beautiful and Attractive Structure.

Our cocher has been ordered to turn into the Avenue de la Tour Marbourg, and suddenly I find that we have come out upon the Quai 'd'Orsay, and are at the entrance of the Pont des Invalides, says the New Lippincott. Here cabby is ordered to halt, and looks on in surprise as we descend into the ankle-deep dust and proceed by means of our open sesame, to the place where four American flags at the corners of a large square indicate the inclosure chosen by our commissioner general for the American pavilion.

Here, on the rive gauche, in company with others of the Pavillons des Etrangeres, will stand the American pavilion, a beautiful and attractive structure, whose broad steps lead down to the water. Here Americans may land, and at once receive that welcome and attention which the visitor soon discovers is second nature to the commissioner general and his staff; and here, more than anywhere else in Paris, will he find himself thoroughly at home.

It is to our commissioner general and his untiring industry that we are indebted for the great amount of space which is to contain the great American exhibit, and even my gloomy guide is tempted to break into a triumphant smile at this new proof of American skill and energy.

WAS DOING SO AND SO.

Quick Retort of a Level-Headed Youngster to a Rather Pertinent Question.

Frank is a boy of less than five years, sturdy, round-headed and thick in the calves. He is always restless and ever hungry. For one so young he commands an amount of language, correctly pronounced, that is remarkable. He is a busy boy, with many queer schemes running through his head. But he shines when playing a knife and fork, for here is he truly great, says the Chicago Chronicle.

It was at a family reunion that he was asked and replied to a question of a personal nature. His retort silenced his inquisitive and would-be jocular uncle, while the remainder of the family—Frank excepted—roared with laughter. The party was too big to have all seated at the extension table, so the children—four in number—were placed at a smaller table, where they were able to do as much damage as could have happened had they been with their elders.

Frank was served badly, for he has a fine appetite, and is not bothered with bashfulness. He bore down on a drumstick with vigor and filled his fat face with the meat. He was earnest in endeavor and suspended all conversation. One of his uncles glanced at the boy as he munched, and said:

"What are you doing, Frank?"

The boy was employed on a large mouthful at the time, and, like a skillful general, he attended to the matter in mouth first. He carefully masticated the cud, swallowed with an air of satisfaction and then turning his head over his left shoulder replied as follows:

"Oh, I'm doing so and so."

He immediately resumed operations on the drumstick.

Papa Liked Rag Time.

The Boston Transcript tells a story of a man who had a class of boys in natural history. One of the subjects which he took up was butterflies and moths, and he told the children a good deal about the chrysalides and cocoons. After he had got the boys well instructed he showed one of the smallest of them one of the cocoons, and asked: "What butterfly is this the cocoon of?" Then the little boy looked up and said, slowly and respectfully: "My papa says that all cocoons look alike to him!"

The Holy City.

Jerusalem is now holding but a shadow of the magnificent city of ancient times. It is about three miles in circumference and is situated on a rocky mountain.

Asparagus is so plentiful on the Russian steppes that the cattle eat it like grass. The seeds are sometimes dried and used as a substitute for coffee.

PART OF WRECKED SHIP.

How a Firm of English Shipbuilders Are Utilising Half of a Stranded Vessel.

Probably the most remarkable achievement in the line of wrecking and rebuilding to be found in maritime history is represented by the reconstructed steamer Milwaukee, which was turned out in the summer of 1899 at the yard of C. S. Swan & Hunter at Wallsend-on-Tyne, England, says the Engineering Magazine.

The Milwaukee, a vessel of 483 feet length and 56-foot beam, went ashore near Aberdeen in September, 1898, a huge rock penetrating the hold for a length of 30 feet and to a height of eight feet above the tank top. When the salvage operators saw that it would be impossible to save the entire vessel it was decided to blow her in two with dynamite. This was done successfully and 180 feet of the fore end was left on the rocks, while the after end was towed to a dry dock.

The saved portion of the vessel depended for flotation until placed in dry dock upon a transverse watertight bulkhead at the forward end of the boiler space. It was towed to the Tyne and moored in the river until a new bow was built, launched and made ready for connection with it. So well was this done that a person ignorant of the facts would never know that he was looking at the original bow, while even those persons who knew the circumstances of the case were unable to point out the point where the junction of the new and old portions was made.

FROST SPOILED THE SPORT.

Sad Misfortune That Befell a Party of Georgia Chicken Fighters on a Stranded Steamboat.

Forty dejected and homesick gamblers returned to Knoxville the other day, says the Savannah News. On Christmas day, with 100 gamecocks, they left on a steamboat for an isolated resort down the river, where they expected to have a great cocking main and return to the city the next morning. The steamer carried no lifeboats. Before the destination was reached the steamer went on a sandbar and stuck fast "ten miles from nowhere." The weather was very cold and ice formed about the craft. The sports, determined to make the best they could of the situation, improvised a pit on the deck and held a few fights. As the hours went by and the night grew older and the ice in the river thicker, there came no hope of getting the boat off or of being rescued. Then someone became hungry, and it was ascertained that the sandwiches had given out. There was nothing to eat on board! For some hours longer the sports put on a brave front, but finally hunger got the best of them and they put their gamecocks—valued at five to one hundred dollars each—to slaughter. For two days and two nights they hung up on the sandbar, eating chicken that fairly tasted of money.

ARMY RULES ENDANGER LIFE.

Standing Up Under Fire Not the Only Absurd Regulation in the British Army.

The "unwritten law" in the British army which forbids officers from seeking shelter when under fire is not the most absurd regulation of the service. There are other "unwritten laws" which are just as Quixotic, and which lead to just as great mortality among the men who are most valuable to the service. One of them is illustrated by a little known circumstance with regard to the famous "charge of the light brigade" at Balaklava.

It is a rule, no less stringent because inofficial, in the British cavalry that when riding to attack only a certain rate of progress is permissible. The regular formation must be kept up, even though greater speed would minimize the chances of loss of life. When the Seventeenth and Thirteenth hussars were nearing the Russian artillery at Balaklava in face of a fire which caused men to fall every moment Capt. White, who was in the second line, spurred his horse with the idea of reaching the enemy as quickly as possible. This brought him to a level with Lord Cardigan, who was in the first line. Lord Cardigan, although he believed that certain destruction awaited the whole brigade, laid his sword across Capt. White's breast, peremptorily forbidding him to ride any faster than the others. White apologized and obeyed, checking his horse at once. Had the hussars been allowed to ride at full speed it is probable that the casualties among them in the course of the charge would have been decreased by 50 per cent.

Birds and Beasts at War.

You would hardly believe that moles, clumsy and almost blind, become perfect demons when they quarrel. No one knows what they quarrel about, but if they once start fighting one has to die. They will keep on in the presence of any number of spectators, hanging on to one another like bulldogs and burying their enormously strong jaws and teeth in one another's flesh. Hedgehogs, another type of the quiet, inoffensive-looking animal, not only fight, but always to the death, and when one is killed the other generally devours him. Hares, on the other hand, are proverbially the most timid of creatures, yet they can fight. A fight between two hares is a ludicrous sight, as they skip and jump over one another. But a blow from the hind legs of a hare is no joke to his opponent. Among birds robins are the most pugnacious. More than one case could be quoted of two robins so frantically set on killing one another as to have allowed themselves to be picked up in the hands of a looker-on and there have laid with beak and claws deeply buried in one another's plumage.

A QUEER CORK SAFE.

Dupes Were Unable to Find the Place Where They Were Bunkoed.

"Did you ever hear of a cork safe?" asked a drummer who represents the latest thing in chilled-steel and burglar-baffling time locks, according to the New Orleans Times-Democrat. "As far as I am aware," he continued, when everybody chorused a negative, "only one of them was ever built. It was made by an ingenious Dutch mechanic for a one-time famous confidence man named Dr. Baggs, who operated in Denver, Salt Lake and 'Frisco. The safe was a folding affair, made of paper on a backing of sheet cork and when it was opened up was six feet high, and looked exactly like the real thing. As it was always placed in a corner, it had only two sides, but every visible detail was complete—combination knob, hinges, lettering, bolt-heads and all. When folded it could be carried in an ordinary dress suit case. Baggs used the thing in a fake lottery office which was of itself a marvel of trick furnishing.

"When the victim entered the place it looked like an ordinary business establishment, with desks, railing, maps on the walls, safe in the corner, and several clerks at work on books. The instant he left a roll-top desk was opened up into a bed. The railing was folded together and slipped into a closet, a table was turned into a wash stand, a cabinet turned into a bureau, the safe was put away in its case, the curtains were pulled down and the room was to all appearances a simple sleeping apartment. By that means the poor dupe was never able to find the place where he had been bunkoed. I saw Baggs' old cork safe when I was last in San Francisco. It is now owned by a cigar dealer, who bought it as a curio, and while it is pretty badly battered, one can still see plainly that it was a wonderful piece of mechanical work."

THE JOLLY HARBOR SEALS.

One of Them Up on the Platform of Their Pool, Watching the The Red Fir.

"What's he watching the clock for?" a visitor at the aquarium asked of an attendant, referring to the smallest of the three harbor seals there, the one with the blackest coat. It was up on the platform at the end of the pool, with its eyes apparently fixed on the clock that is secured to the front of the railing round the gallery. The hour was about two minutes of four o'clock, says the New York Sun.

"He's waiting for the whistle to blow," was the reply, and it certainly did seem as though the little black seal was watching for something.

The seals all know well the sound of the four-o'clock whistle, for that means their feeding time has come. The whistle is the signal of the closing hour of the aquarium, and the seals are fed immediately.

As the people set their faces toward the door the seals dash and slash and prance about in their pool, and jump up half or three-quarters of their length out of the water and look over the railing, watching and waiting for the man with the food. As he walks along the pool toward the platform at the end the seals rush on the platform to meet him.

It may be that the little black fellow just happened to be up there at that hour, and that it was looking at the clock just by chance, and that it couldn't tell the time by it at all; but the seals all know sure enough the four-o'clock whistle.

A KNOTTY CASE.

In Which It Is Shown That Cows Are Valued More Than a Mere Human Body in Africa.

A Uganda woman had married three husbands at different times, and had had a son by one of them—the second, says a writer in Blackwood. The father unfortunately died, and the other two quarreled about the possession of the son, who meanwhile lived with his mother. As soon as he was old enough to take law into his own hands the boy elected to live with the first husband, and left his mother to do so; thereupon the third husband raided the first, carrying off ten head of cattle, and, as if to still further complicate the case, one of the cows calved on the road. It now fell to my lot to decide with whom the boy was to live, and what was to become of the cattle.

So much evidence was produced that I became utterly confused, especially when the mother crawled in on hands and knees to give evidence as to parentage, in which, by the way, she was flatly contradicted by her offspring. I finally decided that the boy was to live with the first husband, and that half of the cows were to be returned to him, the remaining half, with the calf, being kept by No. 3. At this decision No. 1 was delighted, but I could never make out why, as five cows, even without a calf, are usually valued far above any mere human body in Africa.

Bursts Into More Pieces.

The ordinary shell which was manufactured 30 years ago only broke into from 20 to 25 pieces when it burst. At the present time it bursts into 240, while a shrapnel shell, which only used to scatter 37 missiles, now scatters 340. A present-day bomb, when charged with peroxylene, breaks up into 1,200 pieces, and it is estimated that it would effectively kill anyone standing within 220 yards of the explosion.

Jackies Fond of Ball.

Whenever enough men from an American man-of-war can get shore leave, no matter in what foreign port they may be lying, they are almost certain to start a ball game. In the English navy cricket is even played on board ship.

KING POTT OF AFRICA.

A Boer Leader Who Occupies an Exalted Position in the Transvaal.

The town of Lourenco Marques for some time past has been chosen as the head center of the Transvaal secret service. The spies and informers of that notorious gang, says the Cape Times, come and go with all the liberty, swagger and self-assurance, as if they were in the suburbs of Pretoria. Delagoa bay is a so-called neutral port, with a daily train and postal service direct to Pretoria and Johannesburg. There is also a telegraph service, which apparently is at the command of Mr. Pott, the Transvaal consul general and consul for the Netherlands and Free State. It has been said that the Transvaal consul general has a secret service wire directly connecting Lourenco Marques with Komati Poort, and it is well known in Delagoa Bay that Mr. Pott is possessed of the most reliable information of Boer "successes" many hours earlier than any man in Africa. This is extremely detrimental to British interests in South Africa. Mr. Pott is the direct intermediary between Dr. Leyds at The Hague and the Boer-cum-Hollander regime in Pretoria. This worthy Hollander has a perfect knowledge of English, Portuguese, French and German. He is comptroller of Transvaal customs and railway, director of the Transvaal national bank and head of the Dutch East African company. By virtue of his long residence in Delagoa Bay, Mr. Pott is a persona grata in all Portuguese official circles. Some two years back the Portuguese newspaper, O Futuro, published in Lourenco Marques, dedicated a special article to Mr. Pott, in which he was eulogized as "King Pott of Africa."

SAVED TWO TRAINS.

The Heroic Deed of a Modest Watchman on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

It does not take heroics to make a hero; it only takes a man bent on doing his duty in the face of odds. Such a man is among the employes of the Canadian Pacific railway in British Columbia. He is a watchman, and he puts duty first and life second. The Michigan Christian Advocate tells the story of his devotion:

Not long ago a bridge on his section of road caught fire and tumbled into the raging mountain river. It was midnight, and the watchman was alone in the mountains. Coming toward that yawning gap was the limited express from the east, while from the west an excursion train containing 400 American journalists also drew near.

The excursion train was due first, and it was coming from the side opposite that on which the watchman stood.

The man did not hesitate. He plunged into the swollen stream, reached the other shore, ran to the flag station and signaled the excursion train. Then he disappeared in the darkness.

Back to the river he ran without a moment's pause, cast himself in and crossed again. Another rapid run to the flag station on that side, and the exhausted watchman, ready to sink with fatigue, stood by the Pacific flyer that had been brought to a stop at the flag station east of the bridge. He had saved two trains, and perhaps a thousand lives.

His own comment on the occurrence was that he had done his duty.

MOUTH IN QUEER PLACE.

The Voracious Shark Is Well Fitted by Nature for His Rapacious Mission.

No doubt the shark's mouth is placed so much beneath the projecting muzzle, under which also the nostrils lie, that it may serve its proper purpose in the best way. In all records of the habits of the fish, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, we are told that it can and does bite out large chunks of flesh from the dead bodies of whales and even from living victims of its attack; and it is easily seen that if its mouth was like that of other fishes the necessary average would be lacking. A further reason seems to be that the shark by this peculiar position of its mouth is compelled to turn upon its back to strike and is thus able to deliver its onset from below with more deadly effect. This formidable strength of jaw is backed up by a most terrible array of teeth, of which in some species there are as many as six rows all round. Each tooth is saw-edged and pointed, and some of the largest are as much as two inches in breadth at their base. These lie flat against the jaws and can be raised by separate muscles at will, so that, as the shark darts upon its prey, they sping on end, as a cat's claws are stuck out from its paws. This arrangement will not allow anything once bolted to return, so that a shark's mouth is a veritable death trap.

Crime Upon Crime.

In sentencing a prisoner to be hanged for the murder of a soldier Lord Eskgrove dilated upon the crime as follows: "And not only did you murder him, whereby he was bereaved of his life, but you did thrust, or push, or pierce, or project, or propel the lethal weapon through the bellyband of his regimental breeches, which were his majesty's!"

Tomb of the Czars.

It is not generally known that the remains of all the czars of Russia since Peter the Great lie in a memorial chapel built on one of the islands of the Neva. All the cenotaphs are exactly alike, each being a block of white marble, without any decoration whatever.

"COME TO TAW,"

SAYS THE RAILROAD COMMISSION TO THE RAILROADS OF THE STATE,

And Show That Rates Are Not Unjust. Beginning of Real Reforms by the Reorganized Grain and Warehouse Board. The Commission's Position That Southwestern Grain Rates Are Too High, and Other Rates Discriminative—First Move of the Kind in the History of the Commission—Other State Note and Comment—Points on National Politics—Bryan and Caldwell Likely to Be the Ticket.

Reform Press Bureau,
St. Paul, Feb. 26, 1900.

Taking up further reforms by the grain and warehouse commission, that body, now for the first time in Reform control, has made the first move in the history of the commission to call the railroads into court on a general examination of their rates. That important points are involved is shown in the fact that every southwestern road responded, its officials accompanied by a great array of legal counsel. While a short postponement was granted the roads for preparation, the following may be relied on as the position taken by the commission:

First, that the general grain rates for the southwestern part of the state are too high.

Second, that the general merchandise rates, where they differ at local stations from the rates given to terminal points, in favor of the latter, are unjustifiable; that the rates between rural points, except when terminals are in question, should be on approximately the same basis as the terminal rates. At present more favorable rates are given from the cities to small places, than from stations to the cities, or between local stations.

The commission holding as above, will exercise its authority under the law to enforce such view, unless the roads can show reason why it should not do so, the burden of proof being on the companies.

The importance of the move, therefore cannot be overstated. What must be thought of the past administration, ever since the life of the commission, under Republican administration, that no such move has been made before?

Changes of classifications are also the source of other serious burdens on shippers which will now be carefully gone into, an important case having been raised by complaint of Mayor Currier of Mankato, where freight on candy product was raised by changing from third to second rate. The commission invites any other complaints of the kind, during the present week, which will have attention along with the Mankato case. Such should be addressed to Hon. P. M. Ringdal, chairman of the board, St. Paul.

Current New York market reports continue to speak well for Minnesota wheat and Minnesota grades. The quotations for Feb. 21 were:

No. 1 Hard (Duluth)	81¾
No. 1 Northern (Duluth)	80
No. 2 (Red)	77¾

Last year No. 2 Red sold above Duluth No. 1 Northern. Such "ruin" of Minnesota grades is the kind that is welcome to the producers of good grain.

Surveyor General B. J. Mosier of Stillwater, accompanied by J. J. Eighten, is off for an extended trip to old Mexico. Dairy Commissioner Bowler and Assistant White represented Minnesota at the National Buttermakers' convention at Lincoln, and Minnesota brings home all prizes worth having. Surveyor General Corser of Minneapolis attended the Chicago anti-trust conference, as well as the meeting of the Peoples party national committee and also the Democratic national committee meeting at Washington. Insurance Commissioner O'Shaughnessey is back from the East and, having got after some of the insurance concerns, found to be remiss in dues to the state, he brought back some $3,000 to add to Minnesota's strong box.

Iowa's legislature has been wrestling with the proposition to abolish the office of state printer and binder. Is there danger of northward march of the reform, so as to trouble our genial Bureau friend, Colonel Whitney?

And speaking of state matters, it is a cold day up north when the state cruisers are not able to land $10,000 or so of trespass on timber.

And speaking of Mayor Gray's administration of Minneapolis, enough bad people cannot be found in the Flour city to pay for keeping a fire in the jail stove. Another term, at this rate, and the city lockup can be dispensed with altogether. This kind of administration is a good thing to keep. Eh, Doctor Ames?

And at this time Doctor Ames' nomination by the Republicans seems assured. Imagine the predicament of the G. O. P. (good old party, with accent on the "good.")

It has taken 1,000 pages of type-written matter to record all the bad things said on trial, of a Hennepin county Republican office holder. The bad things unrecorded would exhaust the paper mills. The question is what are the people going to do about it? Will the reform forces fritter away their chances this year, or so act as to take all the offices in order that the people may learn the extent to which they have been robbed? Let the people so act as that they may be able to see all the books.

And of the other Twin City politics, the Democrats are day by day more confident of winning in St. Paul this spring with the probability of Humphrey Barton as the successful mayor.

Minnesota sentiment is unquestionably in favor of national planks this year in favor of election of senators by direct vote of the people. Three events that have brought this sentiment into crystalization have been, first, the corruption and bossism by which Hanna secured his election in Ohio, the Quay case in Pennsylvania, and the Montana nastiness. Each case smelled to heaven, with a double back action stink in the last case.

National Chairman Jones asserts his conviction that the Democratic platform will contain such a plank.

From his Eastern tour Mr. Bryan went southward, going as far as Tampa, Fla. It has been the same old story everywhere of enthusiasm, and constantly repeated expressions of love and confidence on the part of the masses of the people.

Reports of Mr. Bryan's eastern trip that manage to filter through the news monopoly, show that he has no longer found there an "enemy's" country, but that he was received by all classes and conditions with the same enthusiasm that follows him elsewhere.

Senator Davis in his New York address declared that "No administration that the people will ever vote into power, will evacuate the Philippine islands." Well, the administration that the people will soon vote into power, will make the best job they can of the mess that Davis-McKinley has made of it. It will give the people self government as far as possible, and if we had had an American administration we would never have made a war of conquest in the Philippines; and there would even now be a promising republic there, its flag, under American protection, kissing the morning and evening sun of hope for its people, a beacon light for other struggling, aspiring people in the Orient. Instead, what have we? A conquered, or soon to be conquered people, hating us with the same hatred that has been given Spain for one hundred years.

And as to Davis-McKinley progress in the Philippines, we are just at the stage of military executions on the luneta at Manila. Filipinos now caught with arms in their hands are to be marched out before the American firing squad, just as in Spanish rule. And what are these people slain for? For what Spain slew them. For fighting for liberty and self government.

And so, after all, we may not keep the Island of Sulu. But our flag is there; who, then, will haul it down? Who said that where the flag was once raised it should never come down? The goppites.

Sioux Falls captured the Peoples Party national convention which will be called for May. The call for Minnesota's convention will be shortly issued by Chairman F. H. Clarke.

Monopolies created by law can and should be abolished by law. Such was the keynote of the recent Chicago conference. "And it rings true," says Public.

"What the trusts have done is to obstruct competition. It is sometimes argued that in them competition has culminated. But that is a mistake. They have not ridden into power upon a wave of competition, but by means of legalized privileges. Make competition free today and trusts would begin to disintegrate tomorrow."

If the mantle of Lincoln has fallen upon McKinley, it is a case of the Jackal in the Lion's hide.

Alas what a change in the observance of Washington's birthday in this year, 1900. Fewer than usual have been the observances, doubtless from the fact that the Republican party, embracing substantially one-half of the people, finds itself arrayed, by an unpatriotic and un-American administration, against so many of the principles taught by Washington. Where can Republicans gather, without facing the warnings of Washington in his farewell address?

And the same is specially true of Lincoln's birthday, for Lincoln's speeches and writings come up in scores of instances to condemn the administration of the party that he led.

On the other hand Democrats and other partisans opposed to present Republican tendencies, have taken greater interest than ever in both observances, and looking up to the whole line of illustrious Americans who taught what true Democracy stands for, Jefferson, Jackson, Lincoln, all of whom we honor, under the leadership of their worthy successor, W. J. Bryan.

How ridiculous this howl about Macrum's opened letters, when this Pro-British Republican administration has this country all plastered over with "V. R." Up with "U. S." Down with "V. R."

With the Populist convention at Sioux Falls, and the Democratic at Kansas City, the Northwest is strictly in it.

It looks as if Bryan and Caldwell were not only already nominated, but as good as elected.

Congressman Fletcher expresses fear as to the peoples' digestive apparatus. The thing troubling the people's digestion most, just now, is the assimilation of Your Uncle Loren.

And speaking of the Minnesota delegation, it is standing by the trusts in good shape, especially as to Porto Rico.

LINCOLN'S WORDS

Applicable to Some of the Great Questions of the Hour,

While Recalling His Birthday, Reflect on Truths He Uttered.

How His Words Confirm "Criminal Aggression" of This Administration.

The Minneapolis branch of the American League, through the local anti-imperialist organization, has issued a pamphlet of the utterances of Abraham Lincoln, which bear on the "Criminal Aggression" and un-Americanism of the McKinley administration. They are taken from Nickolay and Hay's volumes of the "Complete Letters and Writings of Lincoln," the pages and volumes being given in every case.

Read the extracts and make your own application to McKinley's war of conquest, our forcing of sovereignty over and government on the Filipino race; our subjugation, now apparently about complete, of a people who have fought for liberty for many years, and that had an established government of its own, with all their land wrested from Spain when we arrived in the Philippines, except the city of Manila; nay, who hailed our soldiers and flag as their deliverers, acting as our armed allies, up to the time they discovered McKinley's intent to perpetrate forcible annexation upon them, since which time they have made the best fight they could for independence and liberty.

Read what Lincoln left for us, kind friends, and having read, hand it to your Republican neighbor to read, and go out yourself and do something to aid in the overthrow of this administration of "Criminal Aggression."

President McKinley's message to Congress, April 11, 1898:

"I SPEAK NOT OF FORCIBLE ANNEXATION, FOR THAT CANNOT BE THOUGHT OF. THAT BY OUR CODE OF MORALS WOULD BE CRIMINAL AGGRESSION."

LINCOLN IN DEBATE WITH DOUGLOUS, OCT. 16, 1854 (Vol. I, page 195):

"* * NO MAN IS GOOD ENOUGH TO GOVERN ANOTHER MAN WITHOUT THAT OTHER'S CONSENT. * * This is the leading principle, the sheet anchor of American Republicanism."

LINCOLN IN LETTER TO H. L. PIERCE ET AL., APRIL 6, 1859 (Vol I, page 532):

"* * BUT SOBERLY IT IS NOW NO CHILD'S PLAY TO SAVE THE PRINCIPLES OF JEFFERSON FROM TOTAL OVERTHROW IN THIS NATION.

"* * The principles of Jefferson are the definitions and axioms of free society; and yet they are denied and evaded with no small show of success. One dashingly calls them 'glittering generalities.' Another bluntly calls them 'self-evident lies.' Others insidiously argue that they apply to 'superior races.' These expressions, differing in form are identical in object and effect the supplanting the principles of free government and restoring those of class caste and legitimacy. They would delight a convocation of crowned heads plotting against the people. They are the vanguard, the miners and sappers of returning despotism. WE MUST REPULSE THEM, OR THEY WILL SUBJUGATE US. This is a world of compensation and he who would be no slave must consent to have no slave. THOSE WHO DENY FREEDOM TO OTHERS DESERVE IT NOT THEMSELVES, AND, UNDER A JUST GOD CANNOT LONG RETAIN IT.

All honor to Jefferson, to the man who, in the concrete pressure of a struggle for national independence by a single people, had the coolness, forecast, and capacity to introduce into a merely revolutionary document an abstract truth, APPLICABLE TO ALL MEN AND ALL TIMES, and so to embalm it there that to-day, and in all coming days, IT SHALL BE A REBUKE AND A STUMBLING BLOCK TO THE VERY HARBINGERS OF REAPPEARING TYRANNY AND OPPRESSION."

LINCOLN'S SPEECH AT CHICAGO, JULY 10 1858 (Vol. 1, page 259):

"Those arguments that are made, THAT THE INFERIOR RACE ARE TO BE TREATED WITH AS MUCH ALLOWANCE AS THEY ARE CAPABLE OF ENJOYING; THAT AS MUCH IS TO BE DONE FOR THEM AS THEIR CONDITION WILL ALLOW. What are these arguments? THEY ARE THE ARGUMENTS THAT KINGS HAVE MADE FOR THE ENSLAVING OF THE PEOPLE IN ALL AGES OF THE WORLD. You will find that all the arguments of king-craft were always of this class; they always bestrode the necks of the people—not that they wanted to do it, but because the people were better off for being ridden. * * TURN IN WHATEVER WAY YOU WILL—WHETHER IT COME FROM THE MOUTH OF A KING, AS AN EXCUSE FOR ENSLAVING THE PEOPLE OF HIS COUNTRY, OR FROM THE MOUTH OF MEN OF ONE RACE AS A REASON FOR ENSLAVING (OR CONQUERING) THE MEN OF ANOTHER RACE, IT IS ALL THE SAME OLD SERPENT."

President McKinley's message to Congress, April 11, 1898:

"I SPEAK NOT OF FORCIBLE ANNEXATION, FOR THAT CANNOT BE THOUGHT OF. THAT BY OUR CODE OF MORALS WOULD BE CRIMINAL AGGRESSION."

LINCOLN'S ADDRESS AT DEDICATION OF NATIONAL CEMETERY, AT GETTYSBURG, NOV. 19, 1863 (Vol. II, page 439):

"It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government OF THE PEOPLE, BY THE PEOPLE, FOR THE PEOPLE, SHALL NOT PERISH FROM THE EARTH."

LINCOLN'S VIEWS OF CLERGYMEN WHO OVERLOOKED THE GOLDEN RULE, FOUND EXPRESSION IN THE LETTER TO REV. DR. IDE ET AL., MAY 30, 1864 (Vol. II., page 526):

"When * * professedly holy men * * met in the semblance of prayer and devotion, and, in the name of Him who said 'As ye would all men should do unto you, do ye even so unto them,' appealed to the Christian world TO AID THEM IN DOING TO A WHOLE RACE OF MEN AS THEY WOULD HAVE NO MAN DO UNTO THEMSELVES; TO MY THINKING THEY CONTEMNED AND INSULTED GOD AND HIS CHURCH FAR MORE THAN DID SATAN WHEN HE TEMPTED THE SAVIOR WITH THE KINGDOMS OF THE EARTH. THE DEVIL'S ATTEMPT WAS NO MORE FALSE, AND FAR LESS HYPOCRITICAL."

President McKinley's message to Congress, April 11, 1898:

"I SPEAK NOT OF FORCIBLE ANNEXATION, FOR THAT CANNOT BE THOUGHT OF. THAT, BY OUR CODE OF MORALS, WOULD BE CRIMINAL AGGRESSION."

LINCOLN'S LETTER TO W. H. HERNDON, Feb. 15, 1848, ON "ABUSE OF PRESIDENTIAL POWER IN MEXICAN WAR" (Vol. I, page 112):

"The provision of the constitution giving the war-making power to Congress was dictated, as I understand it, by the following reasons: Kings had always been involving and impoverishing their people in wars, pretending generally, if not always, that THE GOOD OF THE PEOPLE WAS THE OBJECT. This our convention understood to be the most oppressive of all kingly oppressions, and they resolved TO SO FRAME THE CONSTITUTION THAT NO ONE MAN SHOULD HOLD THE POWER OF BRINGING THIS OPPRESSION UPON US."

ON SAME SUBJECT FOR PRESIDENT POLK'S "CRIMINAL AGGRESSION," SPEECH IN CONGRESS, JAN. 12, 1848 (Vol. I, page 606):

"I more than suspect already that he (the President) IS DEEPLY CONSCIOUS OF BEING IN THE WRONG; that he (President Polk) feels the blood of this war, like the blood Abel, IS CRYING TO HEAVEN AGAINST HIM; that originally having some strong motive—what, I will not now stop to give my opinion concerning—to involve the two countries in a war, and TRUSTING TO ESCAPE SCRUTINY BY FIXING THE PUBLIC GAZE UPON THE EXCEEDING BRIGHTNESS OF MILITARY GLORY—that attractive rainbow that rises in showers of blood—he plunged into it, and has swept on and on till, disappointed in his calculation of the ease with which Mexico might be subdued, he now finds himself he knows not where. How like the half insane mumblings of a fever-dream is the whole war part of his late message! * * As I have said before, HE KNOWS NOT WHERE HE IS. HE IS A BEWILDERED, CONFOUNDED, AND MISERABLY PERPLEXED MAN. GOD GRANT HE MAY BE ABLE TO SHOW THERE IS NOT SOMETHING ABOUT HIS CONSCIENCE MORE PAINFUL THAN ALL HIS MENTAL PERPLEXITY."

ON SAME, LETTER TO REV. J. M. PEEK, MAY 21, 1848 (Vol I, page 122):

"If you admit these as facts, then I shall be obliged for a reference to any law of language, law of states * * law of religions, any law, human or divine, in which an authority can be found for saying THESE FACTS CONSTITUTE 'NO AGGRESSION.' * * THEN I ASK, IS THE PRECEPT 'WHATSOEVER YOU WOULD THAT MEN SHOULD DO TO YOU, DO YE EVEN SO O THEM' OBSELETE? OF NO FORCE? OF NO APPLICATION?"

President McKinley's message to Congress, April 11, 1898:

"I SPEAK NOT OF FORCIBLE ANNEXATION, FOR THAT CANNOT BE THOUGHT OF. THAT, BY OUR CODE OF MORALS, WOULD BE CRIMINAL AGGRESSION."

LONDON, Feb. 24.—The Globe says: The spirit in which a brave, strong nation should meet trial is admirably illustrated by the temper displayed by Canada. The war, if it has done nothing else, has killed political bitterness and mere party strife in all the colonies. The contrast between Ottawa and Westminster is painful and humiliating."

BERLIN, Feb. 23.—Dr. Leyds, who is now ill at Amsterdam, has accepted an invitation tendered him by the Berlin International Association of Political Science and Economics to deliver a lecture in Berlin, March 14, on "The Political Economic Situation in the Transvaal."

NEW YORK, Feb. 23.—Henry Clay Miner, the theatrical manager, dropped dead during the afternoon at his home on Riverside drive of apoplexy, aged 58.

Mr. Miner had been remarkably well all winter and there was no warning of the end. He was in his room preparing to go for a drive with his wife and was walking across the room when he fell.

While his name was always closely identified with the theatrical business his interests were varied. He owned drug stores, a big lithographing company, a photographic supply house, big phosphate interests and large blocks of railway and mining stock. In 1894 he was elected to congress and served one term. His estate is worth $5,000,000.

MINNESOTA ITEMS

Grocers of Minnesota held their annual session at Winona.

Minnesota sash and door manufacturers are interested in a combine.

The supreme court has declared the inheritance tax law unconstitutional.

A million-dollar ore deal has been nearly completed in St. Louis county.

Minnesota butter was awarded two first prizes at the buttermakers' convention.

The high court, Independent Foresters held its annual session in St. Paul last week.

It is stated that the Great Northern paid over $85,000 more taxes in this state this year than last.

The stock of the Pittsburg Plate Glass company in Minneapolis was damaged $135,000 by fire.

Miss Olive A. Calkins committed suicide at St. Paul by hanging herself to a closet door. No cause is assigned.

An order has been issued establishing a postoffice at Northrop, Martin county, with Orville Merritt, postmaster.

An order has been issued establishing a postoffice at Padua, Stearns county, with William Murphy postmaster.

The Otis Elevator company was awarded the contract for installing elevators in the St. Paul public building, at $12,260.

William C. Vandervoort of Duluth and S. G. Heeley of Coggsville, N. D., were appointed clerks in the railway mail service.

Stedart Webb, accused of the murder of William Larson, at St. Paul, was convicted of manslaughter in the first degree.

Mrs. Sarah Cammack fell on an icy walk at Rochester and fractured her hip. She is seventy-five years of age and her injury is serious.

Wesley church, the largest Methodist church in Minneapolis, was freed from debt at the morning service, when the congregation contributed $23,600.

Papers have been served on the commissioners of Red Lake county in the old Polk county division case. Polk county claims $13,000 from Red Lake county.

Ten sets of plans for the proposed Carnegie library building at Duluth were submitted to the public library board. The plan most favored calls for a building of Ionic style.

W. H. Barclay, at one time heavily interested in the West Superior flour mills, and for two years a resident of Crookston, died of heart disease. The remains were taken to Rockford, Ill., for interment.

Walker is to have a sanitarium. Several Minneapolis physicians have interested themselves in the [illegible] region, and will expend about $60,000 for sanitarium buildings. They expect to begin the work at an early date.

The First National Bank of Duluth shows the largest deposits of any time in its history, $3,592,000. Its capital and surplus are $750,000; undivided profits, $66,131; its loans, $3,087,700, and its reserve and cash on hand, $1,141,735.

Beinie Holt, a young son of Sydney Holt, living near Otsego, Wright county, while sliding down a straw stack, broke his leg. He crawled to the house, some distance. Both hands were frozen solid to the wrists when the little fellow reached the shed door.

Thomas Lawrence, a swithchman on the Northern Pacific at Staples, was caught between two drawbars and killed. He was changing the links between the cars, and walking backward while the train was moving. The deceased was forty-four years old, and leaves a widow and several children.

J. A. Sansom of Cloquet received a verdict of 1 cent at Duluth in his suit against the Western Union Telegraph company to recover 25 cents, the price of a message which he sent from Cloquet to Duluth some time ago. He originally brought suit to recover $200 damages, because the message was delivered in time to be effective.

Charles Johnson, an employe of the Northern Pacific shops at Brainerd, committed suicide by cutting his throat with a razor, severing the cartorid artery and jugular vein. Tuesday was pay-day, and he left home to draw his pay. As he did not return, a search was instituted, and he was not found until the evening of the next day. His surroundings clearly indicated self-destruction. He was forty-five or fifty years old and leaves a wife and seven children.

At Albert Lea, Judge Kingsley sentenced Julius Larson, who pleaded guilty to indictments of grand larceny in the second degree, to the St. Cloud reformatory. Iver Brathvode, charged with illegitimate parentage, was found guilty. The complaining witness was Miss Jennie Christenson. Brathvode was remanded to the custody of the custody of the sheriff until he furnished a bond of $500. The quo warranto proceedings in the case of H. F. Bugeson et al. vs. the village of Emmons, wherein the plaintiffs demand the dissolution of the village corporation, will come up Friday morning.

The loggers are beginning to hire men from Michigan to work in their camps. One Duluth firm has just hired thirty woodsmen from the Menominee district, and others will be brought to various camps in Northern Wisconsin and Northeastern Minnesota. There is a surplus of men in some of the Eastern Wisconsin and Western Michigan districts, and they are attracted by the high wages paid in this section. The loggers of Duluth and vicinity have been very much embarrassed by the restlessness of the woodsmen. One logger who employs 400 men has hired altogether this winter 900 men, and he is short-handed now.

The chief of police of East Grand Forks and his subordinates have served notice upon the keepers of all houses of ill-repute to close their doors. The next night every house was closed for the first time in several years. The saloonkeepers have been notified that the Sunday-closing law must be observed. Operators of gambling houses, poker games and razzle-dazzle have been notified that they, too, must quit, and it is rumored that even slot machines, for years fixtures in every saloon, will have to be turned toward the wall.

Lord Kimberley, it appears, grants pensions of six and seven shillings a week to his aged servants. One of these ancients conceived the bright idea that, in addition to the pension from his lordship, he was entitled to out-relief from the guardians. Accordingly he made an application, which was refused on the ground that he was already in receipt of a sufficient pension. The old man went straight to Lord Kimberley and asked if that was fair. On being assured that it was, he at once offered to resign his pension and go into the workhouse. "For," he declared, "I won't see your lordship done over this."

A short life need not be at all one of but small influence. A short story or sermon has frequently more effect than the more lengthy. It is only speaking from a human standpoint to say that a life is prematurely closed which covers but a portion of the time alloted by the Psalmist. Christ's public ministry occupied but three short years, yet at their close he declared finished that stupendous work, the redemption of the world. Great achievements are permitted a few; but opportunities of influence are imposed upon all, for we are living epistles known and read of all men, and our living preaches more eloquently than our words.

Cushman of Wisconsin is put down in the Congressional Directory as a congressman-at-large, his state being without definite congressional districts. This reminds him of a story which is quoted in the Washington Post. He was once approaching a town, where he was billed to make a speech, and stopped at a house on the outskirts to get a drink of water. He met the farmer's wife at the well. "What is the political sentiment around here?" asked Cushman. "I dunno," said the woman; "I don't go to political meetings. They say there is a congressman at large, and I think the safest thing for me to do is to stay at home."

BARBER'S BROTHER.

The barber's second brother—that was what he gave himself out to be, not that the barber knew anything about him. He appeared at the little shop one day at noon when the barber's assistants were all away.

"Shave me," he said, and settled himself in the chair. His beard was a full black one and handsome.

"You wish to sacrifice your whole beard, sir?"

"Every hair down to the roots. And you may also cut my hair, and do it rather close." The hair was luxuriant and a degree longer than that worn by most gentlemen of fashion.

When the barber had completed his appointed tasks, his patron arose, shook himself, and laid ten $100 bills on the counter which contained the pomades and the bay rum.

"I like your conversation," said he, "and I like the way you shave. I am going to remain and learn the trade from you. I am your second brother."

"Excuse me," said the barber, politely, the hand with which he stroked his pale mustache trembling perceptibly, "but what is the nature of the trouble you are in? It will depend upon that whether I give my consent or not."

"One thousand easy dollars," mused the man, spreading out his bribe attractively. "Are they likely to come your way again, and for a thing so agreeable as the acquirement of a new relative?"

"But I have a wife," cried the barber, "what am I to tell her?"

"Tell her I am your second brother, friend. No, stay; I will tell her myself. Where is she?"

"In the room behind."

The man went to the door and called. A black-eyed woman with a sharp nose entered. She was tidy, and her elbows jerked as she walked.

"Is this she?"

The barber nodded.

"Madam," said the stranger, gravely, "it has come to my ears how poorly provided your husband and yourself are with desirable relations. Also I have learned that there is a dearth of barbers' apprentices. Therefore, I have come to offer my services in a double capacity. I desire to learn this ancient trade of your husband, and also to call myself his second brother.

In consideration thereof I tender him those ten bills, each, as you see, of a noble denomination."

"We may get ourselves in a peck of trouble," said the woman, shrewdly. "I think it is worth more."

An almost imperceptible sigh of relief escaped the stranger's lips.

"How much more?" he asked.

"I should like as much more as there is there for pin money for myself."

"A reasonable request. If I give it to you I shall trust you to refrain from letting the world know of my generosity?"

The tone was jesting, but the man was really a terrible thing to look at at that moment.

There was a menace in his eye that made the pale-haired barber faint.

"I shall never mention it myself, and I shall undertake to see that my husband keeps still, too."

"Thanks, sister-in-law. It is an oath."

"No familiarity, if you please."

"Pardon me, none was intended. It was a jest. Almost everything is a jest. Do not let me detain you any longer."

The woman may have wondered how it came about that she was tacitly dismissed from her own shop. But she left without protest, having gathered up the bills the man had laid out for her. At the door she turned.

"Why, are you our second brother?" she inquired. She was smiling. The bills had been a spiritual emollient.

"Why not?" said he. And he smiled, too.

All that afternoon he took lessons from the barber.

"This is my second brother," said the barber to everyone who entered. "He has grown tired of professional life—he was on the stage, you understand—and he has come to me to learn the trade."

But he was not an able apprentice. That evening, while scraping his own cheek, the razor slipped and made a hideous gash in his cheek, almost letting his eye slip from its socket.

"You will carry the reminder of that piece of awkwardness to the day of your death," said the physician, who took five good stitches in his face.

"Congratulate me," said the barber's second brother to the barber after the physician had left. "You heard what he said—I shall be scarred forever?"

"You pay a high price," said the barber.

The next day the man appeared in the full outfit of a barber, and devoted himself to his work. He kept the shop scrupulously clean, he polished windows and oiled the floor. He brushed the customers and blacked their boots—this last was an enterprise of his own. At the end of a month the shop began to feel his influence. It had become popular. Men who felt sociable, or whose children cried too much, or whose wives did not ardently enjoy their conversation, got in the way of frequenting the place. It was odd, for the barber's second brother said little. But he had a way of making every one feel at home, and he put padded cushions in the chairs and bought the finest towels and best soaps.

"You have made an excellent barber, sir," remarked the barber to his second brother.

"Thank you. You have been an excellent brother."

The man lived with the barber and his wife six years—slept in the little bedroom off their kitchen, ate at their table with them, walked with them to the park, and read aloud to them evenings. At the end of those six years he remained as much a mystery as the day he came, but he had inspired affection and even gratitude in the hearts of the barber and his wife, who by all reckoning should have disliked him mightily. One day he disappeared.

"My brother has gone back to the stage," explained the barber. He said it sadly. He was really lonesome. He tried to keep up the habit of reading evenings, but he could not be interested. He endeavored to make the shop look as it had for the six past years, but he could not succeed. Trade began to fall off. Everything seemed dull. The barber found fault with his wife and she found fault with him.

"He ought not to have left us," they sighed. "He might have known how lonesome we would be."

They were like children who have suddenly become orphans.

One day a letter came for them from a distant city—a city at the under side of the world.

"Shave no more chins, dear brother," it read. "I send you and Miranda the means of rest. And I wish, by the way, if you have the desire, you would come over here and see me. I have a palace here beside the sea, and a servant for every different want. But I am lonesome. I do not require it of you—but I long for you. It is easy for me to send you the inclosed.

"Your Second Brother."

"He had lost all his old friends, I suppose—the friends he had before—" the barber's wife got no further.

"I think we'd better go at once," said the barber. "He may be needing us. Besides, it will be pleasant living in a palace."

"I always liked the shop well enough," said the woman rather wistfully, "but it's easy enough for us to go, having no children." She sighed and looked about her.

The barber wiped his razors and put them in their cases.

"We might make a present of the shop to poor little Bill," said he. Bill was the assistant.

The next day the barber and his wife held a sort of reception and said good-by to everybody.

"We are going to our brother," said they. But on the verge of going a message reached them.

"It is all over. Have been apprehended. No hope. Farewell."

"Why didn't he stay here, where he was safe," sobbed the barber.

"Poor lamb, poor lamb," she wept.

They never heard from him again. They never learned his true name. They went away and lived in a quiet place upon the fortune he had sent them. They had no compunctions of conscience about using the money.

"What was good enough for him is good enough for me," said the barber.

GLASS BUILDING STONES.

They Have Been Used to Advantage in a German Hospital.

Glass building stones will no doubt soon become a substantial building material. These "stones" were invented in France, but are now made in Germany. They are hollow and filled with rarefied air. They vary in shape; some are cubical; some are hexagonal, and some are brick shape. They are laid like bricks in special mortar, the corners being filled out by half or quarter stones. These smaller patterns are necessary because it is impossible to trim the stone. An operating room at the Elizabeth hospital of the Sisters of Mercy, in Cassel, has recently been constructed of these stones. There are no windows, excepting those above. The walls are air-tight, keeping out heat as well as cold, while vapor is not condensed upon them. They permit the entrance of daylight and at the same time diffuse the direct light of the sun. They also act sometimes like mirrors, reflecting light into the room. Although they allow light to pass through them they are not transparent, and one on the outside cannot see what is going on within. The walls may be readily washed and thus kept aseptic. If this building material should become popular we may yet live in glass houses despite the old proverb, but it wouldn't do to throw stones.

Kinsmen Across the Border.

Many Americans gladly acknowledge their kinship with the Anglo-Saxons beyond the water, but we must remember that we are still more literally cousins of the great people to the north of us. For a century and a quarter Canadians and Americans have intermarried freely, and the border cannot divide ties of blood. Not long ago the dispatches from South Africa announced the death of Lieut. Wood of Halifax, the first Canadian to die for the British empire in the Boer war. It is an interesting comment on our relations with Canada to note that this young lieutenant was the great-great-grandson of Zachary Taylor, who was a major in the war of 1812, and fought against the British with all the zeal for fighting that was in him, and that his great-grandfather was Jefferson Davis, who, as a young man, married Taylor's daughter. It is usually represented as a runaway match, but Mr. Davis himself wrote that it was nothing of the sort. In spite of such American antecedents, Lieut. Wood lived a loyal subject of the queen, and died for her majesty's empire.

Fossils Plentiful in Wyoming.

Wyoming is the graveyard of vast numbers of enormous fossils. The bones of animals and great reptiles that flourished in the jurassic and the triassic period of the earth's geological history are now being dug out of the sandstone strata and the shale. Fossil mining has become quite an industry in the state.

KILLED BY OWN MEN.

HOW MANY ARMY OFFICERS MEET DEATH.

Soldiers They Have Humiliated Take a Terrible Revenge—French, Spanish and German Officers Were Thus Slain—One of Many Tragedies.

The recent cruel and utterly unfounded rumors to the effect that Maj. Logan was killed in the Philippines by a bullet from the rifle of one of his own men recalls cases of this kind which really did happen. It seems a very unlikely thing that in the heat of a hard-fought conflict the origin of a man's death can be determined—that is to say, whether he died by the hands of one of his comrades or by those of the enemy; consequently men with a grievance against their officers have often made use of such opportunities to wipe off old scores and have gone undiscovered.

A notable instance of this occurred just before the battle of Woerth, in the Franco-Prussian war. A certain officer of considerable repute had got himself generally disliked by his perseverance in bullying those under him. A few days before this, the first great battle of the war, when the French were nearing the border in their hopeless endeavor to reach Berlin, a rumor ran through the camp late at night that the Prussians were advancing and would shortly be up. Instantly pandemonium reigned and scouting parties were sent out in all directions. One of these was under the officer in question, and when some way from camp was fired upon, the bullet bringing him down. The Frenchmen, thinking they had got into an ambush, retired, firing at an invisible foe as they did so, but as no counter shots were received they grew courageous again, and after being reinforced, advanced to the fatal spot. The body of the officer was found; but not so that of his assailant, who had evidently escaped unscathed. On returning to the camp it was found that no trace of the enemy had been discovered; in fact, at that time the Prussians were far away from the spot on either side of Woerth. Accordingly a post mortem examination was held on the officer's body, and a French service bullet extracted therefrom, but the murderer was never detected, although he was doubtless in the camp and had slipped out unawares to commit the crime. But this is only one of many tragedies which took place during the war, and it is said that at least two per cent of the French officers killed fell by hands of their own men, and a little over half that number in the Prussian army. In the former instance the crimes were due for the most part to the national failing of never forgetting a grievance and in the latter to the rigidity of discipline which sometimes amounts to bullying. Even Marshal Bazaine was nearly murdered before he capitulated at Metz. He was by no means a popular man, and on this account always stood in dread of the assassin, and his fears were not lessened when a plot was discovered to put poison in his food, the scheme being hatched by his own men. The offenders, or some of them, were promptly tried and shot before many hours were over.

A rather sad case is recorded in connection with the Italian disaster at Adowa of a few years ago. During the melee a man was seen to shoot in the direction of his captain, who at the same time fell mortally wounded. When the battle was over the man was charged with the crime and, after a scant trial, shot by his comrades, despite his protests of innocence, one of the chief reasons for his condemnation being that he was known to have a grievance against the officer. Nevertheless the affair was soon forgotten till some nine months afterward, when a soldier came forward from the same regiment, self-charged with the crime. He related the facts in detail, giving his motive as petty tyranny on the part of the officer some years previously when he, the murderer, was a recruit, and stated that he would never have given himself up had not another man died in his stead. Needless to say, this did not excuse him, and he perished in the prison yard at Naples.

Not many months ago three Spanish soldiers were executed at Madrid for the alleged murder of an officer during the hostilities in Cuba, although the evidence against them was very meager.

How Sicilian Carts Are Decorated.

In the rural districts of Sicily the people, though poor, take the greatest pride in the decoration of their carts and the mules that draw them. The carts, which are only roughly constructed, are remarkable from the fact that almost without an exception the woodwork of each is elaborately carved and painted with scenes from Bible stories, each panel having its picture with a portion of the scenes represented. The paintings cannot be said to possess much artistic merit, the hot Sicilian sun playing havoc with the brilliant colors, which are applied unsparingly and without much regard for harmonious blending. The Bible characters represented are invariably in Oriental or Arabic dress, which is one of many facts that are held by Sicilian history to point to Arabic occupation of the island in former times. Some of the cart-owners decorate the shafts of their vehicles and even the spokes of the wheels. The rim of the wheel is always painted or carved.

Motto on our Coins.

The word "God" never appeared in any government act until the year 1864, when, at the suggestion of the director of the mint, ex-Gov. Pollock, of Pennsylvania, "In God We Trust" was stamped on the copper two-cent piece. Before that time "E Pluribus Unum" had been the motto. Strange to relate, "E Pluribus Unum" on coins never was authorized by law.

COCOA PALM'S MANY USES.

From It Filipinos Get Food, Drink, Shelter, Ropes, Brooms and Soap.

There are several species of cocoa palms growing in the Philippine archipelago, but the ordinary cocoanut tree (Cocos nucifera) is the most important. The Indians make use of it in a good many ways, but only the principal ones need be enumerated, says the Journal of the Society of Arts. The kernel of the nut they use for food, while the liquid the shell contains makes a refreshing drink. If allowed to stand for some time this liquid forms a very agreeable milky juice that is relished not only by the natives, but by Europeans as well. After this juice has coajulated it is mixed with sugar and made into bonbons, known as cocoa sugar, and also into various other delicacies. According to a recent report of the United States department of agriculture, by tapping the central bud that crowns the cocoanut a kind of wine called tuba, of an agreeable pungent taste, is produced. This tuba, when allowed to ferment, produces vinegar, and when distilled a kind of brandy, that is highly relished by the natives. From the husk of the cocoanut the Tagals make rope and cords and a material for calking their boats. From the woody shells they carve spoons, cups, beads for rosaries and many other articles. The leaves they use to cover the roofs of their houses. Roofs made in this manner are thick and tight, but they have the disadvantage of burning readily, so that in the towns and villages where the houses are thus covered conflagrations spread with great rapidity. The veins and smaller ribs of the leaves are used to make brooms, the midribs serve as fuel and the ashes are utilized in making soap. The trunk of the palm is made to serve as a pillar to support the houses that its leaves overshadow. Oil barrels, tuba casks and water pipes are fashioned from hollow sections of the trunk. From the roots the natives extract a red dyeing material that they chew in place of the areca palm nut or bonga when the latter cannot be procured. Large quantities of cocoanut oil are manufactured in the Philippines. This oil is much prized by the natives. The men and women both use it to anoint the thick growth of hair that adorn their heads, and it thus finds a ready sale at remunerative prices. It is also used in the lamps that take the place of gas burners in the streets and in those used by the natives and Chinese in their houses. Manila exports annually about 150,000 pesos ($125,000) worth of cocoanuts to China and British India, and about $25,000 worth of cocoanut oil to China.

AWAITING A CLAIMANT.

America's Rich Tropical Island With No Inhabitants.

A tropical island of nearly 10,000 acres, forty-two miles due east of Porto Rico, is waiting for some enterprising homesteader to stake out a claim. This island belongs to the United States, but no one lives on it except a lighthouse keeper. It is known on the map as Mona island. It has luxurious vegetation, well watered, and drained. Every variety of tropical fruit will grow there and it possesses every natural advantage. It is in the middle of the Mona passage. Mona island became the property of the United States by the second clause in the treaty, which cedes "the island of Puerto Rico and other islands now under Spanish sovereignty in the West Indies." The officials of the general land office in Washington say that, while our land laws have not been extended by statute to the West Indian islands, they undoubtedly will be, and American methods of homesteading pre-emption and entry will obtain there. To this extent the lands are free to any one applying. Under the homestead act heads of families may enter 160 acres of public land set aside for that purpose. Mona, while one of the most interesting of the small islands taken from Spain, is not the largest. Vieques, or Crab island, east of Puerto Rico, about five miles from the mainland, is twenty miles long and about fifty miles in area. It is not well suited for cultivation, but affords good pasture.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Commercial Opportunity.

Instead of looking with apprehension to China as a possible competitor in the markets of the world, it should be the earnest and constant effort of our government and people to stand for the maintenance of the equality of commercial opportunity which we possess under existing treaties with that empire. We have our share to do in building the thousands of miles of railroads still wanting in China, of supplying her with all forms of machinery, with electric plants, and with all the appurtenances of productive industry and civilized progress for which China offers, and will continue to offer, for generations to come, the greatest market in the world. Never, surely, was the bogy of over-production invoked with so little reason to frighten enterprise and to repress the growth of commerce, as with reference to an industrious race of 350,000,000, of a nation just awakening from the slumber of centuries.—"Commercial Possibilities of China," by James S. Fearon, in the January Forum.

It Refused to Be Comforted.

Mr. Henry Irving, the well-known actor, once took a fancy to a beautiful collie dog belonging to a Highland shepherd. The man was very unwilling to part with his dog, but the sum offered for it—£60—was a little fortune in his eyes, and he resolved to sell it. There are two in the making of a bargain, however, as the saying is, and when the collie reached London it refused to be comforted. In fact, it was so unhappy in its new life, and its misery caused Mr. Irving to feel so uncomfortable, that he determined to restore it to its old master. Imagine the dog's joy, and the shepherd's, too, when the creature returned to its Highland home. One is reminded of the love of the Arab for his steed in reading of this pretty story.

The Fate of the Great Salt Lake.

It is prophesied that before the end of another century the Great Salt Lake will be entirely dried up. The cause for this is said to be the excessive drain made upon it by the irrigation and enterprises of the Mormons. Contrary to the theory which was accepted for a time, this great lake is not fed by underground springs, but by the Jordan, Weber, Ogden and Bear rivers, and when the water of these streams is interrupted for irrigation purposes, it necessarily decreases the water supply of Salt Lake, leaving it more to the mercy of the sun and the attendant evaporation which is constantly going on, and which is slowly but surely drawing the water away until in time only a bed of dry salt will remain. The cause of the saltness of the water of this mysterious body of water has been a matter of conjecture to scientists for years. The most plausible theory is that the saltness is due to high altitude, which causes excessive evaporation, while there is practically no outlet to the lake. A scientist after a number of experiments has expressed the conviction that if all the salt supply in the entire world were cut off except that found in the bed of the Great Salt Lake, there would still be enough to last the world for ages, so deep is this deposit. Regarding the decadence of the lake, a writer recently said: When the Great Salt Lake is gone it will be missed as a wonder and as a salt factory, for little else. Its waters destroy vegetation instead of nourishing it. Should the fresh waters of Utah Lake, however, be evaporated or disappear into the earth thousands of square miles would cease to be habitable. Some years ago the Utah Lake region was made a government reservation, an act which has kept irrigation companies from drawing water either directly from it or from its feeders.—Irrigation Age.

Railroads as Plant Distributors.

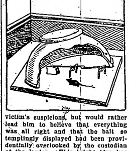
It has been noticed that many plants, not natives of the locality, are to be found growing in the neighborhood of great railroad yards. Sometimes the seeds of these plants have been brought thousands of miles from their natural habitat. Often they flourish amid their new surroundings, and gradually spread over the surrounding country. Thus the railroads carry unsuspected emigrants, which travel to and from every point of the compass. In the Mississippi valley are to be found plants which, within a few years past, have been thus brought together, some from the Atlantic seaboard, some from the Gulf region, and some from the other side of the Rocky Mountains.

Doctors for Ailing Plants.

A writer in the Contemporary Review urges the need of a new class of educated physicians whose business shall be the care and cure of disease-threatened and disease-stricken plants. "The time will come," he says, "when every agricultural district will have its plant doctor." He even foresees the development of specialties by plant doctors just as by other physicians, so that in many difficult and obscure cases of disease affecting valuable plants, the services of such specialists will be employed. The foundation of schools of practical plant pathology is urged as a matter of national importance.

Novel Mousetrap.

A novel adaptation of an old principle is seen in the mousetrap here shown. The familiar bird and rabbit traps of youthful days are suggested in its arrangement, but the idea of using an ordinary bowl for the cage is brand new and constitutes its most unique feature. It is natural to suppose that a bowl would form a most effective trap, as its familiar shape and character would not arouse its victim's suspicions, but would rather lead him to believe that everything was all right and that the bait so temptingly displayed had been providentially overlooked by the custodian of the larder. This bright idea has been developed by an inventor of Mapleton, N. D. The device consists, as shown, of a base board, carrying two supports and two levers, which interlock. The end of one engages with the end of the bowl and is maintained in its position by the other lever, which is supported by the bait. When the latter is removed, or ever jarred, the levers are released and the bowl falls, capturing the nibbler.

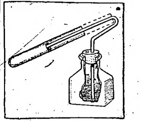


Electrical Research.

Professor McAdie says that before long science will succeed in measuring the energy of a lightning flash, and also in demonstrating the nature of the aurora. That the aurora is an electrical phenomenon has long been recognized. An intimate relation seems to exist between the aurora and the sun spots. In 1882 the astronomer at Greenwich sent out notification of the appearance of an enormous sun spot on November 17 of that year. For three hours on the morning of that day not a wire of the Western Union Telegraph company could be used, and not even the market quotations could be distributed. At night there was a brilliant auroral display, and all telegraph service was again interrupted. Cables to Europe and wires to Chicago were alike unworkable; but some messages were sent as far as 700 miles by cutting off the batteries and utilizing the atmospheric electricity. Over half of North America, across the Atlantic and over northern Europe, it seemed as if legions of ethereal demons were busy inciting electric and magnetic apparatus to strange and mischievous antics. The artificial production of an electric fire-ball by Professor Richman is unique, though electricity in this form is not unfamiliar. Sometimes such balls are seen to run along the surface of the sea, and when they appear on land they usually burst with a loud noise, often with disastrous effects. Nobody has yet been able to explain these balls, which appear to be a very concentrated form of electricity. When the experts say, as most of them do, that electricity is merely a form of motion, the explanation is more or less unsatisfactory, but how is one to account for the presentation of a form of a motion in the shape of a luminous sphere?—Boston Transcript.

Automatic Fountain Pen Filler.

The usually disagreeable task of filling a fountain pen is made easy and the probability of ink-stained fingers and spotted clothes reduced to a minimum by the filling device invented by an inventor of Hackensack, N. J. This ingenious arrangement consists of a bottle to hold the writing fluid and a stopper in which there are two performations. Through one of these a slender tube, bent in the form shown, passes and extends to the bottom of the ink reservoir. At its extremity a piston is carried which, acting in conjunction with the barrel of the pen reservoir, forms a miniature suction pump. Its use is very simple. The top is unscrewed from the pen as usual and the piston placed in the barrel and pushed down to the bottom, thus expelling all the air, which escapes through the hollow tube carrying the piston, bubbling up through the ink, and passing out through the opening in the stopper. Now, when the piston is drawn out of the barrel by the movement of the latter a vacuum is produced back of it, and this naturally draws or sucks the ink out of the bottle. The size of the filling tube and its shape are designed so that the operation of filling is practically automatic, just enough ink being drawn out to fill the barrel without overflowing it, the surplus falling back into the bottle, leaving the device ready for the next operation.



Corn-Stalks Turned to Account.

The American Agriculturist shows how cornstalks, formerly almost a waste product, have lately been turned to account, until now the farmer can get from $3 to $5 a ton for them. They play a part in the building of warships, being used to form cellulose for packing cofferdams; they are utilized in the manufacture of smokeless powder; paper pulp can be made from them; they furnish pyroxylene varnish, are useful as a packing material, and together with the leaves and tassels enter into the composition of various prepared fodders and foodstuffs.

Recent Inventions.

A New York woman has patented a shirtwaist attachment which securely holds a skirt in place, comprising a metal plate to be screwed to the waist at the right height to receive a pair of hooks attached to the opposite flaps of the skirt.

To protect the shirt and collar a new article or apparel has a circular band to fit inside the collar and be buttoned in front, the upper edge of the band being attached to a circular cape, which hangs down on all sides and covers the shirt.

Children will find much pleasure in a new go-cart which has a pair of oscillating levers pivoted to the sides of the seat, with rods leading to the front wheels for attachment on the spokes, whereby the operation of the levers turns the wheels and propels the cart.

To protect the window frames of a building when another building is on fire a portable fire-proof curtain has been patented, having a bracket for attachment to the interior of the window, which supports an iron pole on which the curtain is hung outside the window.

Two Maryland men have designed a rotary plow which has a series of teeth projecting from the edge of a revolving wheel, with a system of gearing to connect it with the shaft carrying the supporting wheels, the toothed wheel being geared to revolve rapidly in the ground.

Newspapers can be neatly kept in a newly designed file, which is formed of two parallel strips of wood hinged together at the back to form a pair of jaws, several U-shaped springs being inserted in the strips to grip the front edges together and bind the backs of the papers.

For use in delivering water to a window-cleaning brush a newly designed handle is hollow and has a piston set inside, with a slot in the side of the handle by which a pin is connected to the piston to operate it, drawing water from a pail and delivering it to the brush.

For holding shoes rigid for polishing when off the feet a handy device is formed of a bracket attached to the wall, with one portion fitted with a heel support, and the other carrying a vertical screw, which is lowered until it clamps the heel of the shoe and holds it rigid.

Railroad cars can be easily shifted by the use of a new implement, comprising a lever, which has a pair of plates attached to one end, with curved ends to fit the flange of the wheel, a chain being hooked over the axle to increase the traction on the wheel and allow it to be revolved.

MAN, WOMAN, CHILD.

A soft summer wind whispered through the leaves of two sister maples that stood in the lawn at the end of a lane bordered by rows of stately locust trees.

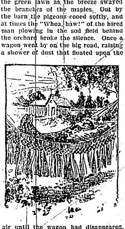
The white blossoms hung heavy over all the trees and the fragrant perfume fell like incense, sweetening all the air. With every ripple of breeze the blossoms fell like snowflakes through the deep purple shadows in the arcade through which the lane ran.

Back from the maples a white farmhouse stood, and all about lay the hush of amidmorn in the time when spring is turning into summer.

Suspended between the murmuring maples a hammock swayed softly and in the hammock a young man and a child lay sleeping. The arms of the child were clasped around the neck of the young man and his wet cheek pressed the cheek of the older sleeper. Straying locks of his curly brown hair fell damply across his chubby face. Below the hammock a tousled dog lay flattened against the ground, sleeping, too, after the morning romp.

The child was "Bobs," who had been christened Marshall Edward Alloway, the son and heir of John Alloway, whose broad acres reached down to the big road where the lane and "Bob's" world ended. His slumber mate was "Bobs' Man," more properly Henry Ayers Lyle, junior partner of the firm of Harvey, Landess & Lyle, attorneys and counselors-at-law, who was spending his vacation on the Alloway farm.

Stray blots of sunlight filtered through the leaves and danced upon the green lawn as the breeze swayed the branches of the maples. Out by the barn the pigeons cooed softly, and at times the "Whoa, haw!" of the hired man plowing in the sod field behind the orchard broke the silence. Once a wagon went by on the big road, raising a shower of dust that floated upon the air until the wagon had disappeared, rumbling across the bridge where the road turned toward the town.



Presently a snatch of song, brokenly accompanied by the clatter of tin, came from the house. A flash of light from bright buckets brightened the hall and a tall girl came out on the porch.

As she beheld the sleeping pair the notes of the song dropped and she came rapidly forward across the grass, humming still the air of the hymn, and, bending over the hammock, printed a kiss upon the child's forehead. Then she deftly rigged a handkerchief to protect the faces of the sleepers from the sunlight, and, smiling, stepped softly to the tune she was humming and went down the slope to the whitewashed springhouse by the great sycamore tree.

As the summer aged "Bobs" and his "Man" grew closer. At times they slept entwined in each other's arms on the shady side of a hay cock or on the great mound of fragrant hay in the mow, where the pigeons cooed them to sleep. At night when Bobs had said his "Now I lay me down to sleep," the man and the girl sometimes sat together on the porch. Sometimes they talked in low tones, while the breezes sang lullabys in the maples and the stars hung like golden russet apples in the blue-black summer sky. Sometimes they sat silent as the fireflies danced in curtains of soft light over the clover and the chirr of the cricket and the song of the frog came up to them.

During those evenings they came to know each other closer, and she told him of her life, how, while she was away at college, her sister, the mother of "Bobs," had died and she had given over all her hopes and ambitions to come home to care for John Alloway's motherless child.

One night as they sat silent there came a patter of bare feet upon the oilcloth in the hall, and "Bobs," arrayed in innocence and red flannel, burst out upon them.

The woman snuggled the child close in her arms, and for a long time he lay looking from one face to the other, and when he went reluctantly to his trundle bed he kissed "Man" good night.

When the woman tucked him in his couch she kissed the spot where "Man's" lips had touched, but she came no more to the porch where "Man" smoked restlessly and waited as he watched the mists rise over the valley as the moon came up.

After many days, when the grass had burned brown all along the big road and the cattle panted knee deep in the branch, there came one morning, an unusual stir in the farmhouse.

"Man" was going back to his wills and titles—back into the big world.

Dinner was served early, but all during the morning the woman went about her work with no song. "Bobs" hung onto her skirts almost unnoticed, and when she did kiss him she did so absently and without thinking.

At noon the big farm wagon was at the door, the trunks were thrown in, and the good-by was said. "Man" kissed "Bobs," promised "to come again soon," and the wagon whirled away down the lane in a cloud of dust.

The woman stood motionless, with her elbows on the top of the rail fence. When the wagon reached the hill, where the big road turned and was lost, "Man" stood up and waved his last good-by.

The woman's head sank upon her arms and she remained motionless until "Bobs" tugged at her dress and whimpered:

"Me cry, too. Man dawn away."

Then she took the child in her arms and went down into the springhouse.

SMALLEST MARRIED COUPLE

Smaun and Fatma, Two Tiny East Indians, Have that Distinction.

Smaun and Fatma, two tiny East Indians, are the sensation of the hour in one of the leading music halls of Berlin. They are undoubtedly the smallest married couple in the world. Smaun is the taller of the two, standing almost 20 inches in his sandled feet. Fatma, his better half, is shorter by about an inch and a half. They were born of peasant parents in a village of Central India, and were brought to Germany by a theatrical manager, who has been traveling in the Orient in search of novelties for the vaudeville stage. Smaun has developed under the guidance of his manager, into a gymnast of no ordinary caliber, and is particularly clever in performances on the trapeze and with the so-called Roman rings. Fatma is very light upon her feet, and has made a hit in native Indian dances. What a diminutive couple they are is well shown by comparing their height with that of a champagne bottle of the quart size. When the latter is placed upright by the side of Smaun the top of the cork is on a level with the middle of his cheek bone, while at the same time it is almost even with the crown of Fatma's head. Both dwarfs were born in 1879, and in neighboring villages. At birth Smaun weighed about twenty-three ounces, Fatma was barely seven inches in height when born, Smaun probably an inch or so taller. After exhibiting through the fall and winter in Germany and Austrian cities these little wonders from the far east are to visit Paris, where they will be star attractions while the exposition last; a year hence they expect to be in America. Tiny as Fatma is she is not the smallest person of whom we have knowledge, although she is believed to be the most diminutive one now living. Toward the end of the last century a child was born to a peasant couple in northern Germany which weighed less than nineteen ounces at birth, and was at that time under seven inches in height. An ordinary wooden shoe was its cradle; it lived beyond its teens, and grew to the tremendous height of seventeen and a half inches.—St. Louis Star.

AMERICANS CLING TO BUTTONS

Useless Sartorial Accessories That Are Deemed Indispensable by Men.

Americans cling to old customs nearly as much as do foreigners. Probably nothing is more useless than the buttons on the back of a man's coat and yet they have come down through many years and no coat is considered complete without them. In the old days, when every gentleman wore a sword, nothing detracted more from his dignity than to have the sword belt sag down in the back. The buttons were placed on the coat so that the belt might rest on them and be even all around. Later, when swords were discarded and in the revolutionary days, the gentlemen wore coats with flowing skirts. The skirts were considered highly ornamental when the wearer was standing still, but when he went for his walk the flapping of the skirts caused him to present an appearance more ridiculous than dignified, so the skirts were made with a small buttonhole in the corner and our forefathers buttoned the skirts on the back of the coat when they sallied forth with their canes and snuff boxes. The buttons are all that remain to us of the costumes of those days. The buttons on the sleeves come from the same times. The gentlemen wore neither mittens nor gloves, but instead he had the sleeves of his coat made long, so that he could draw them over his hands, even to the tips of his fingers. It added more to the dignity of the gentleman's appearance to go forth with his hands clasped in front of him and his sleeves meeting so as to cover them than it would have done to wear large and clumsy mittens. On warm days the gentleman did not desire to have his hands covered, so the sleeves were made with a slit back to the wrists and the gentleman turned back the sleeves and buttoned them so that they made a cuff. Hence, the buttons on the sleeves and the slit in the sleeve frequently made and carefully sewed up on the coats of the present day.—Indianapolis Press.

Manila's Feature.

Not only are there magnificent opportunities in the Philippines for American civilization, commerce and industry, but there is the dazzling possibility of making Manila the center of western Pacific trade. Manila adjacent to a population of 50,000,000 people should before many years surpass Hong Kong, to which Great Britain owes such a large part of her Chinese commerce. The chief distributing centers of China, Japan, Corea, Siam, Annam and the East Indies are as near to Manila as Havana is to New York; and the distributing centers of British India and Australasia are nearer to Manila than to any other great emporium. At present we furnish only one-twentieth of the billion dollars' worth of goods that countries within easy commercial range of Manila purchase yearly. Yet the larger part of these imports is made up of goods that we can supply at a lower price than any other country—tools and machinery, cotton and cotton products, provisions and mineral oils.—Ainslee's Magazine.

It Defeats Its Purpose.

"Don't you think it's very rude to talk during an artist's musical performance?" said Willie Wishington. "Yes," answered Miss Cayenne, "especially when one considers that the music is designed to give relief from the stupidity of conversation."—Washington Star.

Don't.

I might have just a little fun,
If it wasn't for a word,
I'm sure the very baddest one
As ever I have heard,
I hopes as it would go away,
But suppose it won't—
I fears as it will always stay,
That dreadful word of 'Don't.'

It's "Don't, you make the slightest noise,"
And "Don't lie on the floor,"
And "Don't you break your pretty toys,"
And "Don't you open the door,"
And "Don't you go near the press,"

The Man with the Wooden Leg.

It was Saturday morning, and a fine lot of snow had fallen during the night—two facts which, taken altogether, suited Danny exactly, and very soon after breakfast he took his sled out for a grand good time. But when he reached the gate he stood still in surprise. Such queer tracks there were in the fresh snow! There was the print of a man's foot—a big one, too—and then where there should have been another like it, was just a round hole, and so on down the street went these peculiar tracks. Danny looked at them a few moments; then followed them along the walk, turned a corner with them, and so kept on until they led him right up to the porch of Mr. Johnson's grocery store. They were not on the porch itself, because Mr. Johnson's clerk had swept the snow off, but it was quite clear that the maker of the tracks had gone into the store, and since there were none going away from it, that he was in there yet. Danny hesitated. He wanted to go in, but those prints in the snow gave him a queer feeling, somehow. While he was thinking about it, the store door opened and a man came out—a large man with a cheery face. He wore an old blue overcoat, with a cape, and his arms were full of packages. All this, however, Danny scarcely saw at first. His eyes, which were always big, but just now were bigger than usual, were fixed on the man's legs, for one of them, below the knee, was not a real leg at all, but something made of wood, fastened in place by straps; and Danny saw at once that this was what had made these holes in the snow. "Well, little chap!" the man said in a big, cheery voice, after a few moments in which, while Danny was looking at his wooden leg he was looking at Danny. "Never see one before, eh?" "N-no, sir," replied Danny, somewhat embarrassed, and afraid he may have been rude. "Please excuse me." "Oh, certainly. Look at it all you like," replied the man, stumping along off the porch, while the little boy watched him curiously. Just then one of the packages fell to the ground. Danny at once sprang forward and picked it up. "Let me draw 'em all for you on my sled!" he exclaimed, eagerly. "I can just as well as not. I live your way." "You do, eh? How do you know which way I live?" inquired Danny's new acquaintance, now quite curious himself. "Because I—I saw the tracks go by our house, and I wondered what made 'em, so I came to see." The man with the wooden leg laughed—a big laugh, and cheery, like his face and voice. "Well, well!" he exclaimed, as he arranged his packages on the sled. "That's it, eh? Yes, thank you; I'll be glad to have you haul this stuff for me, my man. You see, we only moved here yesterday, and I had to skirmish round early this morning for provisions. I haven't got much acquainted in this town yet, but if you're a fair sample of the folks, I think they must be a pretty nice, obliging sort." Danny looked pleased, and they started for home. "I suppose you are wondering how I came to have a leg of this kind," the man continued. "Well, there isn't time for the whole story now, so I'll only tell you that I lost the mate to this one"—slapping the whole leg—"in the battle of Antietam, many a long year ago." "Oh, did you?" exclaimed Danny, full of interest. "And will you tell me all about it some day, if you please?" "I don't know," the man replied, seriously. "War is a terrible thing, my boy; but I'll tell you something about it, if you will come to see me. I can carry the things now. Thank you for your help, my little friend." "Oh, I can take them clear home, just as well as not," said Danny, and presently he had his load at the door of the tiny house—a small house for such a big man, he thought to himself. The big man and Danny became great chums, and although the old soldier with the wooden leg and the cheery face and voice soon had very many friends in his new home, not one of them all held a warmer place in his heart than the little boy whose acquaintance he made that snowy Saturday morning.—C. A. P.

Why They Hiss.

Hissing and spitting by young kittens, even before they see, was in the first place probably an attempt to intimidate enemies by making them think that the hole where the helpless wild kittens resided contained a venomous snake. It is a very curious and remarkable fact that many different kinds of creatures which have their homes in shallow holes have a similar habit of spitting when an enemy approaches. Furthermore, it is probable that the expression of a cat at bay is part of the same instinctive stratagem. We know how general is the horror of the serpent tribe throughout all nature, and hence it seems likely that the serpentine aspect of the head of an enraged cat, together with its threatening hiss, might disconcert an enemy sufficiently to give an advantage to the cat. Curiously enough, cats of all species have their tails marked transversely in a way which resembles the marking of serpents, and several naturalists have marked how similar are the sinuous, waving movements of the tail of an angry cat to the movements of the tail of a snake in a state of excitement. The true tabby cat, when it is curled up asleep, has a curious resemblance to a coiled serpent, and the same is true of many wildcats of different varieties and coming from different parts of the world. If this really is an instance of protective mimicry it is possible that the chief foe guarded against was the eagle. Eagles are very fond of cats' flesh, and it has been remarked by naturalists in various parts of the world that these formidable birds habitually make war upon the smaller creatures of this kind.

Long and Short Days.

According to the latitude in which one lives are the longest days comparatively long or short—that is, the hours of actual daylight or the time between sunrise and sunset of the longest day in the center of the United States differs greatly from that of the longest day in northern Canada.

The following list shows the duration of the longest day in various places over the world: New York has, so to say, the shortest longest day, which is about fifteen hours long, while in Montreal it is sixteen. London and Bremen bask in a sixteen and a half hours' length of day, closely followed by Hamburg and Dantzig with thirty minutes more. The longest day in Stockholm lasts eighteen and a half hours; but both St. Petersburg and Tobolsk, Siberia, go one better, with a day of exactly nineteen hours; and their shortest five hours. June 21 brings to Tornea, Finland, a summer day nearly twenty-two hours long, and Christmas day two and one-half hours only. (How unfortunate are the children of Tornea!) The foregoing lengthy days, however, are easily left behind by Wadburg, Norway, which boasts of a day lasting without a break from May 21 to July 22; but even this is surpassed by Spitzbergen, where the longest day is something like three and one-half months.

Mischievous Monkeys.

At Benares, India, there is a temple belonging to the monkeys who are held sacred by the people and a party of Americans visited this temple not long since. We had provided ourselves with popcorn and goodies, writes one of the party, which we intended to offer the monkeys, but they did not give us a chance to give them the dainties. They snatched them from our hands, and when our supplies were gone they amused themselves by mocking us. One of our party, who had a bad cold, blew his nose very loudly. Scarcely had he replaced his handkerchief in his pocket when a monkey seized the end, pulled it out, and gave a fine imitation of the act. Then, of course, some of us had kodaks, and after we had taken several pictures another little imp picked up a little block of wood which lay upon the ground, and with it took several snap shots at us. A third mischievous simian (a vain mother moneky, who deserted her infatn for the purpose), grabbed from my shoulders a red scarf, and in a few flyng leaps carried it to a lofty minaret. There she put it on, and seemed to be quite proud of her looks. But she was not allowed to keep her prize. In about three minutes at least forty monkeys had bit a piece of my precious scarf. Then our nativbe guide informed me that the monkeys were very fond of scarfs, and that they captured a great many on the stone "ghats" near the temple while their owners were bathing in the river.

A Bird's Barbed-Wire Fences.

In Central Ameria are many strange birds with stranger habits, but probably none are more interesting than a little brown wren who may be seen along the roadsides or on fences. This little bird, about the size of a canary, builds a nest out of all proportion to his apparent needs. He selects a small tree with horizontal branches growing close together. Across two of the branches he lays sticks fastened together with tough fiber, until a platform about six feet long by two feet wide is constructed. On the end of this platform nearest the tree-trunk he then builds a huge, dome-shaped nest a foot or so high, with thick sides of interwoven thorns. A covered passageway is then made from the nest to the end of the platform in as crooked a manner as possible. Across the outer end, as well as at short intervals along the inside of this tunnel, are placed cunning little fences of thorns with just space enough for the owners to pass through. On going out, this opening is closed by the owner by placing thorns across the gateway, and thus the safety of eggs or young is assured.

Ginseng in Vermont.

Considering that ginseng hunting has been a source of income to some in this state, and that effort has been made to cultivate the root here, it may be of interest to give a few details concerning diggers of ginseng in Tennessee, where the plant is indigenous in certain sections. Demand for the root is constant, and the price high. It has been a mystery as to what the Celestials have made of the root—perhaps a substitute for opium. Later authorities claim it is used as a medicine for nearly all the ills to which the Celestial is heir. The United States is now dividing honors with the Chinese empire in consumption of ginseng. It is made into medicine here and considered one of the greatest remedies of the day for gastric disorders. Great sums have been expended in its cultivation, but success has not been flattering.—Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

FARM AND GARDEN.

MATTERS OF INTEREST TO AGRICULTURISTS.

Some Up-to-Date Hints About Cultivation of the Soil and Yields Thereof—Horticulture, Viticulture and Floriculture.

Horticultural Observations.

As spring approaches the mind of the farmer naturally turns towards the planting of seeds and the setting out of plants. At this time do not permit the practical to entirely eclipse the beautiful. Take another step in advance in the ornamentation of the farm and home. Put out a few trees and vines at least. This does not necessarily mean a large outlay for trees and shrubs brought from a distance. In many places on the farm trees will be found growing wild that if removed and placed in a position where they will be observed in relation to certain other objects will become things of beauty and value. A few running vines, planted in proper positions, will add much to the appearance of the old place.

According to the statement of a prominent horticulturist, frozen apples may be utilized in the making of vinegar. The gentleman in mind said that one winter he had some apples stored in his mill that were caught by a hard freeze. He did nothing with them till they were thawed out in the spring, at which time he put them into his cider mill and ground and pressed them. He got one-third more cider than usual and it made first-class vinegar, and even took less time to acquire acidity than cider made from unfrozen apples. We all know how juicy the apple is that hangs on the tree all winter and is thawed out in the spring. But if there is no objection to such vinegar the question naturally rises "Why don't they make all their cider that way, since they gain one-third more in quantity?"

There are many old orchards that might be galvanized into life by a thorough pruning. When they are in their last stage the danger of such an operation is small; for their usefulness is near an end anyway, and if a few extra crops can be obtained by heroic methods, they should be applied. It is no unusual thing to see a decadent orchard given up to the woodman. A few issues ago we referred to some experiments by H. A. Aldrich, in which the results of pruning an old orchard were snown. In his case the trees bore a heavy crop of apples the following year. Whether subsequent years will show success or failure remains to be seen. The effect may be where a heavy crop is secured for a few similar to that of girdling or ringing, years, but early death results. In the case of young vineyards and orchards this is not a result to be worked for; but we can afford to take long chances with dying orchards.

* * *

The writer remembers an old Greening apple tree in the East that had lived and borne fruit till its trunk had been split open by some process of nature, revealing a heart failing into decay. A great gale came and tipped the tree over till it rested on its branches. One would think that such a tree had lived out its entire life, and this would have been the case had not the tree been in a place that was in every way suitable to stimulate its recovery. It was sheltered to some extent by the farm outbuildings and more by a board fence. It also received the drainage from the barnyard, and in fact its roots extended to the barnyard. So it continued to live, and year after year it bore a small quantity of very large apples, which were fine in texture and superior in quality. It illustrated the fact that a large supply of fertility in liquid form is of great value as a health-restorer to decadent trees. If we would take this lesson more to heart we would have fewer unproductive orchards. The statement is probably true, that more orchards are starved to death than are killed by overfeeding.

Listed Potatoes and Corn.

Last summer I was greatly interested in watching a field of "listed" potatoes and corn, says L. B. Pierce in Country Gentleman. A town Irishman had under his charge a small farm just outside the city. He rented it, but when plowing-time came the tenant gave up the contract, and left him with a piece of land of rather doubtful fertility and no one to work it. It had been in corn the year before, and my Irish friend, with but one horse, set his wits to work to get another crop with a minimum of labor. He ran a large shovel plow between the rows one way and marked with a corn-marker the other. He then dropped by hand a strip of potatoes, and planted the rest with corn, covering all by straddling each furrow with a Planet Jr. cultivator, with the sweeps turned inward. The potatoes came nicely, but the seed corn, being taken from a lot got at a feed store, nearly all failed. It was replanted with a "jabber" or hand-planter, but the soil being shallow it failed to cover nicely and was again replanted with a hoe. The result was a long-drawn-out period of waiting for the smallest to get big enough to cultivate, the owner not being advanced enough in his methods to harrow or get a fine-tooth cultivator; in fact, he was bound to be at no additional expense for this somewhat problematical and accidental piece of farming. It must have been about seven weeks after the potatoes were planted before the man got in to cultivate, working across corn and potatoes the first time. By the time he got ready to cross his cultivating, the potatoes were a foot high and alive with bugs just hatched; but he was equal to the occasion, and one morning I saw him with two wild-cherry boughs lashed across his cultivator. The boughs in going and returning swept as with a besom the high, slender tops, brushing about all the bugs to the ground, and many of the smaller when buried by the cultivator never got back upon the tops, while all were so distributed as to do comparatively little injury; he had to use Paris green on only two poor slopes where the potatoes were too small to receive proper treatment at the passing of the brush. After the man once started the cultivator he worked as only an Irishman can work, and the result seems to point to a fine crop of potatoes, and as good corn as could be expected with two seed failures. I might explain that the crop the previous year had been kept very clean, and the land not being reversed there was but little trouble with early weeds.

This is the first case of "listing" which has come under my observation, and the inference I should draw would be that where corn is to follow corn it might, with some modification, be practiced even in Ohio. Had the man started cultivating across the furrows the day after planting, while the marks were fresh, and put the cultivator down deep close to the hills, there would have been but a very small spot not loosened. The other way, the old cornhills would guide the cultivator at any time before the crop came up, and it would be possible to have the whole under clean, mellow cultivation before the crop came up. It is a quick way of putting in corn or potatoes, and if I had a rush job on hand I should not hesitate to try it.

Bad Bordeaux Mixture.

From Farmers' Review: It is somewhat remarkable that in the preparation and the application of Bordeaux Mixture, operations that the orchardist and the gardener are now pretty well acquainted with, there should be complaint as to the efficacy of the fungicide. It is said that the compound is sometimes no more useful than mere water and that a substance like chalk settles at the bottom and will not dissolve and mix readily with the liquid part. In the first case the trouble is probably not in the fungicide, but is due to the disease having got too great a headway before being sprayed. The disease must be prevented, not cured, therefore, spray early and thoroughly.

The chalky powder is found only in old mixture or at least in that not freshly prepared. Its formation may be explained as follows: When the solutions of lime and of copper are united in the formation of Bordeaux mixture there is a chemical as well as a physical combination, but the fine particles of the combined lime and copper commence to collect in little masses which gradually become too heavy for the water to hold up and they fall to the bottom of the powdery, chalky mass. It may be seen, then, that if these particles are too large to be held in suspension they will not be as effective when applied to the plants as if they were smaller. The following will prove the case.

Some Bordeaux was made and allowed to stand for a few weeks. It was then applied to plots of potatoes, as was also some freshly mixed fungicide. Some plots were also left unsprayed. It was found that the plats sprayed with the old mixture were at the ends first sprayed as free from disease as were the plots sprayed with fresh mixture, but that the last ends of the plats were as badly diseased as were the plats not sprayed at all. This shows that the effective part of the fungicide in the old mixture rapidly settled to the bottom and was pumped out at once, thus leaving only water, and that in the newly made stuff the poison was evenly distributed and thus uniformly effective.

It is clear from these experiments that this fungicide should be applied as soon after being mixed as possible. In fact, some growers are this year going to mix only what can be applied in one day. It is believed by some of them that the throwing away of whatever is left at the close of the day's operations would be an economy in the end.

Clover Hay.

We notice in a contemporary an assault on clover hay. The writer of the article in question seems to think it an impossibility to get clover hay in good order, and says he had "rather raise three babies than one clover hay crop." That is an odd comparison, and we are inclined to think that he knows about as much about raising one as the other. The complaint is made that it is difficult to get a catch, and after the catch is made it is difficult to know when to cut it. After that the rain always comes, with him, and soaks the hay, making it moldy and unfit to use. Well, we would advise a little experience in the matter. It is indeed often difficult to get a catch, and in some years no amount of forethought can prevent a failure. Many of our best farmers succeed in getting a start by sowing on the snow in March.

As to cutting clover, it has long been a settled tenet with our scientific farmers to cut at time of the earliest blooms, unless the field is a small one, when it may be cut at time of full bloom. The reason for mowing at time of first blooms is to get the whole field cut and in process of curing before the blooms begin to fade. This prevents the stalks becoming woody and gives us the fodder in the best possible shape. The curing of clover hay is not such a difficult feat, with good weather. If foggy New England can cure clover hay, we see no reason why it should be a difficult task in the West, where the amount of sunshine per month is much greater. In recent years, too, we have the help of a new invention—the hay cap. These caps can be made for a few cents each, and are a complete protection against storms that may come at time of curing the clover. They will last a long time, for some years they will not have to be used at all.

We would like to hear from our readers as to the amount of damage that has been done trees this winter by rabbits and other rodents. When the snow covers the ground the animals that attack fruit trees have their supply of food shut off and have to resort to the bark of trees for sustenance. But this winter has been exceptionally mild with no snow to amount to anything throughout most of the west. According to the accepted theories there should have been no damage done to the trees. What are the facts in the case?

Pansies if planted in rich sandy soil, will grow well and bloom till far into the fall.

Pansies do not, as some people think, need a great deal of shade.

ILLUMINATING GAS.

Some of Its Dangers and How They Are to Be Avoided.

Numerous accidents occur annually in the use of gas for lighting, cooking or heating, through either carelessness or ignorance, says Cassier's Magazine. The largest number of accidents, probably, occur from ignorant persons either blowing out the gas or turning it off, and subsequently turning the cock on sufficiently for the gas to escape unnoticed. Many other accidents are the result of the bad practice of turning down a gas flame, particularly in a bedroom. This is always ill-advised, for such a turned-down flame may be either blown out by a draft of air from an open window, or else it may be extinguished by a sudden variation or reduction in the pressure. When this happens in a small bedroom without ventilation there is great danger of asphyxiation, particularly so if water gas is used. Much can be done to avert this danger by a proper arrangement of the gas piping in houses. Another dangerous custom is to shut off the gas at the main service or at the gas meter during the night, and numerous accidents, some of them fatal, have resulted from it. It is almost equally bad to turn off the gas at the meter during the day. Notwithstanding the universal introduction of gas lighting, there are still many persons who would be benefited by receiving plain instructions on the use of gas in the household. Gas companies would benefit themselves and the public by paying more attention to this matter. Among available statistics may be found numerous incidents of death or accidents due to faulty management of gas. Among the more remote causes the writer finds the following mentioned: In one of two adjoining rooms, supplied with gas from one so-called prepayment gas meter, a man retired for the night when the gas supply from the meter was exhausted, but forgot to close his gas burner. The occupant of the adjoining room came home late at night, dropped a coin in the slot of the gas meter and got a fresh supply of gas, which meanwhile also escaped in the adjoining room, killing the occupant. Escape of gas and explosions have also happened in the use of gas cooking stoves, where boiling water, running over the vessel, extinguished the flame. It has already been mentioned that the so-called independent gas connections with two keys may lead to accidents by the wrong one being turned by mistake. Where the gas in the cellar freezes in winter time it is dangerous to attempt to thaw out the gas meter or service with a flame. A gas meter should never be examined with a burning light, nor should any tools be used near a gas meter known to be leaky, on account of the danger of flying sparks.

TOOK HIS BREATH AWAY.

Clergyman Drops a Good Gardening Hint in His Sermon.

The clergyman who narrates the following incident in the Interior confesses that, despite his years and his experience with all sorts and conditions of the feminine mind, it took his breath away. He was preaching about the Father's tender wisdom in caring for us all. He illustrated by saying that the Father knows which of us grows best in sunlight and which of us must have shade. "You know you plant roses in the sunshine," he said, "and heliotrope and geraniums, but if you want your fuchsias to grow they must be kept in a shady nook." After the sermon, which the clergyman hoped would be a comforting one, a woman came up to him, her face shining with pleasure that was evidently deep and true. "O, Dr. ——, I am so grateful for that sermon," she said, clasping the clergyman's hand and shaking it warmly. His heart was stirred for a moment, while he wondered what tender place in her heart and life he had touched. Only for a moment, though. "Yes," she went on fervently, "I never knew before what was the matter with my fuchsias."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Regularity in the Order of Injuries.

A queer fact, well known by medical men connected with hospitals, is that the doctors can tell with almost absolute certainty which classes of fatalities and accidents fit in with given days and even hours. One of the doctors connected with a leading hospital in the center of the city said: "We will begin with Monday. That day furnishes by far the highest proportion of mishaps to work people, but I must say that this proportion is rapidly diminishing. Nearly all the attempted suicides come in during the very early part of the day, and the first accident batches early in the day have a large number of men who work on scaffolds among them. Hardly a morning goes by without a scaffold casualty case. After 11 o'clock in the morning most of the cases arise from street accidents, and when evening comes cases arising from drunken rows and deliberate assaults begin to come in. Nearly all the 'domestic' cases—where wives have been assaulted and so on—are late night and Saturday ones. It would take me a long time to group the regular order of accidents as they come in day after day."—Philadelphia Record.

WHY NOT USE IT?

Last Saturday's election has at least done one good thing. It has taught the people living in the northern part of the county their power. Red Lake Falls has heretofore controlled about everything in Red Lake county, while the voters in the northern part were blindly voting their ticket, Red Lake Falls was working the excitable French voters to do their bidding. They very naturally thought that the earth and the fullness thereof was theirs for the asking. The 1898 election clearly showed that neither the voters of Red Lake Falls or the French allies would stand by their party nominations. It is not too early to predict that in the next campaign, party lines, so far as county affairs are concerned, will be disregarded just as completely in the north part of the county as in the southern part. Men now holding office in the county who obtained their election by trading party and everything in sight for their own election. The voters in the north part of the county are not fools and will not be tricked again. We all know that taxes have been climbing higher each year and that we have been compelled to bond for $30,000.00 in addition to pay running expenses. THIS MUST STOP. Let the people organize and control their own affairs. Thief River Falls and St. Hilaire with the surrounding country hold the power. Why not use it?

We are pleased to inform the Courier that the bonds are killed and the saw mill not yet mortgaged.

The Red Lake Falls Gazette asks: "Can the farmers be fooled?"—From the bond vote it appears they cannot.

A minister at Monango, N. Dak., selected a warm subject when he preached "To Hell and Back Again" a few weeks ago.

Red Lake Falls papers are afraid the county records will be burned up. Shouldn't wonder a bit. Better move them to a safer place, where fires are less numerous.

"The dozen reasons why you should vote for bonds" cut no figure in this election. Perhaps it was on account of "paying attention to the St. Hilaire townsite boomers" that won out.

The Courier calls the SPECTATOR'S article insulting which refers to Dr. Watson's $250.00 bill. We sincerely hope—for the good of the county, that we will not be called upon to do it again.

The Crookston Tribune says that the plan of issuing court house bonds in Red Lake county was turned down and that there was numerous disappointments on both sides. Some one has been stringing the Trib. No disappointment here.

Will some one kindly tell us why there happens to be twenty-six millionaires in the United States senate and whose interests they are protecting? Will anyone deny the imputation that these men have secured their seats in the senate through the influence of their money and will anyone deny that it is about time the American house of Money Kings be abolished in the general interests of the commonwealth?

Notice is hereby given that all prospected lines of railroad through Equality, Garness and Lambert are hereby declared to be abandoned. All taxpayers will have to come to the temporary county seat by horse power. Those contemplating remaining over night are advised to bring their blankets and tents and carry their grub as there is no hotel in the village.

TURNED THE TABLES.

The Surprise Was For She Who Had Planned to Surprise.

That surprises do not always surprise those for whom they are intended is one of the peculiar things about surprises, and this fact was well illustrated one day this week in an east end house. The lady of the house received word from a friend that she was coming out the next day for lunch. Now, it happened that the next day was the day on which the servant girl had her day off, and the lady of the house made up her mind that she would surprise her friend by getting up a nice lunch prepared by herself, for she had the reputation when they were young ladies of not being able to cook, while her friend had the reputation of being an excellent cook.

The day her friend was expected the lady went to market and laid in a supply of all the good things which go to make up a fine lunch. She went home and lighted the fire and prepared for the cooking. Just then she discovered that she had forgotten to get some fruit and told her young daughter to tell her friend when the latter came that she would be back in a few moments. She went to the store and, meeting some of her friends, staid quite awhile, forgetting how time was flying.

In the meantime the friend arrived, and, being told that her hostess would soon be home, she went into the kitchen, and, seeing the good things there, she went to work and cooked and prepared the lunch. When the lady of the house arrived home, she was astonished to see the table set and a most appetizing lunch on the table. The surprise she had intended for her friend was a surprise for her.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

The editor of the Times was presented with a 20 pound turkey by Alton Cornes, the product of the farm of V. R. Heath, his step father, who is a prominent farmer of Parkers Prairie, Douglas county. The turkey came in good play on the anniversary of Washington's birthday and was a great improvement on hay and wood generally furnished an editor when he is short on vegetables.—Roseau Times.

Warned by Those About to Die.

Camille Flammarion, in a French periodical, asked people to answer the following question: "Have you ever had while awake the impression of having seen a human being and had that impression coincide with the time of the death of that person?" The astronomer tells the result of his investigation in the Nouvelle Revue.

He had 4,280 responses, of which 2,456 were negative and 1,814 affirmative. Of the affirmative replies he examined 782, who recited 1,120 cases, all of which he regards as authentic. In his article M. Flammarion merely gives the experience of the subjects as related to him and does not attempt to account for the premonitions.

It might be said, however, that the fact that 40 per cent of those who wrote to him had had telepathic experiences does not indicate such an average among the human family. The three periodicals whose readers he asked for information have a large circulation, and it is safe to say that every reader who has had premonitions of the death of a friend wrote to Flammarion, while the others would not regard it as worth while.

Philosophy of a Six-year-old.

Some bright little girls who live in West Ninety-sixth street were recently taken by their parents to see the wonders of the "zoo" at Bronx park. As they reached the habitation of the wolf they found the beast just devouring a live sparrow as a portion of his dinner. The eldest little girl, becoming excited and indignant over the spectacle, stamped her foot, exclaiming: "Oh, you cruel, wicked wolf, to eat that dear little sparrow! What a monster you are!"

Miss Marion, aged 6, looked at her incensed sister with a philosophical air and said, "What do you want the wolf to do—shoot it and cook it first?"—New York Tribune.

We Want Correspondents.

We desire a correspondent in every school district in the county, one who will give the local news of his or her locality in a fair and impartial manner To any one who will undertake the matter the SPECTATOR will furnish the necessary stationery and postage and will send the paper free during the time the person acts in that capacity. Only one correspondent desired in each district. It is an advantage to any community to be represented in the columns of the local paper.

An Unwonted Aspect.

"This is Mrs. Gushleigh's portrait, is it?" said the caller. "I should hardly have recognized it. The chin doesn't look at all like hers."

"Perhaps," suggested the husband of Mrs. Gushleigh, "you have never seen her chin in repose."—Chicago Tribune.

For the benefit of our neighbors on the south we will state that Thief River Falls is on the map and in Red Lake county—not on the reservation and casting "squaw" votes as they would like to have it appear.

Every one in town is personally acquainted with the three that cast their votes in favor of bonds and as they own little or no property it was immeterial which way they voted as far as they were concerned.

Thief River Falls sent down word to hold room for fifteen teams to-night, as it take that many loads to convey her citizens who have signified their intention of taking in the banquet and dance at Hotel Markham to-night.

"The town that is dead three-fourths of the year" woke up in time to cast a few votes at the recent election, regardless of the fact that the lumber company "took all the lumber away from the farmers church the other day, and did so on Sunday to prevent the church people stopping them."

Several sleigh loads of our young people drove to Thief River Falls last Thursday to take in the Royal Neighbor's dance. All went well until they started for home in the morning—and that was different as a genuine blizzard was raging with the thermometer registering 10 below. However the wind was at their back and they suffered but little with the cold as they were well bundled up and sat in the bottom of the sleds.

Cosmopolitan and Spectator.

To secure for you the best and most interesting of the great illustrated magazines at the lowest possible price has been the aim of the editor of this journal. That we have succeeded we will leave our readers to judge. A special contract recently entered into with The Cosmopolitan, which seeks to become better known in this neighborhood, has enabled us to offer you a year's subscription to the greatest of the illustrated magazines together with a year's subscription to this journal, both together one year for only $1.90.

Farm, Stock & Home.

50 cents per year. Read by a greater number of Northwestern farmers than any other agricultural paper published. Are you among the number? If not; Why not? Every department in the hands of a specialist. Short talks department. A department where all kinds of questions are answered for the benefit of subscribers, is a leading feature of the paper. No northwestern farmers list of papers is complete without it. This paper and Spectator one year for $1.35.

Cosmopolitan, New York World and The Spectator.

You wish to keep in touch with metropolitan life, through the medium of a great daily. The Thrice-a-Week World of New York is the equivalent of a daily and is a marvellous fund of knowledge concerning the happenings of the day. Each issue contains six to eight pages of eight columns each or over eight thousand columns of reading matter a year. In former days this would have cost you probably as much as $4.00 a year, by itself. Now you can have it, if you wish, in connection with your home paper and The Cosmopolitan Magazine. Three together one year for only $2.50.

P. G. Paradis:—Publish my name. I would not have signed it in the first place if I did not mean it.

E. J. Brink:—I an still in favor of giving Red Lake county a free court house.

Daniel Patterson:—My name on that free court house guaranee was good before election and it is good now.

O. F. Post:—I signed the free court house guarantee and my signature is still good.

H. O. Jackson:—I will do all in my power to make the guarantee good.

E. M. Hoff:—I feel the same as ever. I never lend my name to deceive the people and the guarantee is good.

A. H. Weagant:—My name or word is good. The county can have a free court house if the county seat comes to St. Hilaire.

Peter Hall:—I never bluff. The guarantee is good so far as I can make it.

M. E. Bjerk:—The free court house offer was in earnest as far as I am conserned.

The foregoing interviews of a few of the business men of St. Hilaire will show that the free court house guarantee, which is republished this week, was not a fake as reported by Red Lake Falls. The offer is as good as gold. It is up to the people. A court house to cost not less than $10,000 upon a free site will be given to the county, providing the county seat is located at St. Hilaire.

DIED.

Miss Olive Evenson died last Friday forenoon at the residence of her brother-in-law, N. O. Johnson, where she has been making her home for the past year. Miss Evenson has been sick for some time troubled with dropsy disease and at times suffered a great deal. Although it was generally known that she was likely to die at any time, still the announcement of her death came like a shock to her many friends in the village who mourn her untimely end. The funeral will take place this afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, Rev. Aastad officiating.

After a few days struggle with that dreat desease, penumonia, A. G. Akerberg passed quietly and peacefully away Friday afternoon at his home on Water street. Mr. Akerberg for many years lived on his farm two miles east of town, but last fall moved into this village and engaged in the draying business. He was an honest and upright man and had a large circle of friends. His remains were laid at rest yesterday afternoon in the Swedish Lutheran cemetery, Rev. P. Lindberg conducting the funeral services. The Spectator joins with the entire community in extending sympathy to the bereaved family.

Local Papers.

It is not fair to insist upon getting one's local paper at as low a subscription rate as he can the weeklies of large and general circulation, that are reprints of dailies, hence cost nothing for type setting, and are printed on huge lightning presses that reduce cost of printing to the minimum. It is simply a physical impossibility to get out an edition of 500 to 1,500 papers, usually printed on a hand press, at anywhere near the cost of their big competitors, and subscribers should not expect or ask to be furnished them at the same price. Besides, the local paper is worth more, simply because it is local, with its home news, its influence all centered upon prompting the interests of its own locality, the advertisement is to its town and country, and for other reasons too numerous to name. It would be much better to encourage improvement in home papers by paying a fair price for them than to discourage enterprise and improvement by expecting them to cope with invincible competition.—Farm, Stock and Home.

Postage stamps in books convenient for pocket use will be put up and sold by the postoffice officials at the rate of 25 cents for a book of 12 two-cent stamps if the plans of Postmaster General Smith and Third Assistant Maddee materialize. It is proposed to make the books of a size fitting one's vest pocket place was paper between the layer of stamps and to print on the outside the book postal rates and other information Among the advantages of printing stamps in this form are that they will not crumple in the pocket, the purchaser has stamps always at hand in convenient form, the wax paper keeps the stamps from sticking; there is a supply of stamps available without carrying a box or opening one's pocket book in public. It is estimated that one cent profit charged for the 12 stamps in book form would net $6 for each 1,000 books sold, or would produce about $230,000 profit annually for the department.

Dentist.

—Dr. J. H. Thomas, the Crookston dentist will be at Hotel Markham, St. Hilaire, March 26th and 27th prepared to do all kinds of up to date dental work in all branches. All work warranted. Remember the dates 26th and 27th.

The Fertile Journal does not guarantee the following but it sounds all right and might be worthy of a trial: There is an easy way of cutting glass bottles that housekeepers should know about. Almost everyone has large bottles that when cut may be used in many ways, as for jelley tumblers, etc. To do it, tie a wrapping cord two or three times around the bottle a little below where you want to cut it. Saturate the cord thoroughly with alcohol but do not allow the liquid to run down the bottle. Then set it on fire and when the blaze has almost gone out put a few drops of water on the cord and the glass will be cut off as clean as if a diamond point had been used.

The Arnewood Mystery

BY MAURICE H. HERVEY.

Author of "Dead Man's Court," "Somerville's Crime," "Dartmoor," "Maravin's Money," etc., etc.

CHAPTER XX—(Continued.)

"Come! Now you're talking sense!" exclaimed Blogg, approvingly. "You won' find me onreasonable, neither, especially considerin' what I might insist on if I chose. Well, in course, I want the £850 as should have been handed over to-night. But if you'll bring £500 to-morrow, in gold, mind, I'll be satisfied with the £350 till then."

"Anything else?" The words seemed to be forced out, so slowly were they uttered.

"Rather. You bet there is. You'll have to give me an agreement, properly fixed up by the lawyers, for £10 a week out of your rents so long as you live. I've made a rich man of you, and I'm going to enjoy life, too!"

"And—suppose—I refuse?"

Blogg hesitated. The question appeared to stagger him. "Refuse?" he repeated. "Refuse, when there's a halter round your neck—even though there's another round mine? Not you; you'll not refuse. You daren't!"

"You are quite right," assented Mr. Blake, after a short pause. "I dare not refuse. You are a liar and a treacherous hound, but you have your fangs in my throat and I am at your mercy. Here's your money," he added, opening the bag. "I'll change the draft for gold to-morrow. Perhaps you'd like to count the coins?" he added, passing a small canvas bag to the blackmailer.

"As well make sure," laughed the now triumphant Blogg. "It don't cost nothing!"

It did, though. For, while he was untying the little bag, a life-preserver descended with murderous swiftness upon his head. And again! And yet again!

Dirk Vanston had charge of the lock, and, almost before I had realized what had occurred, he had seized Philip Blake and wrenched the bludgeon from his grasp. The Irishman struggled fiercely, as though realizing that his very life depended upon the issue, but he was quickly pinned down by the iron-muscled professional.

"The cord, Mr. Weston, and quick!" cried Dirk. "He will break a blood-vessel, else, in his efforts to free himself!"

Between us, we had no difficulty, of course, in securing his limbs, so that he could neither injure himself nor us. He knew me at once.

"I'll be hanged if I did not suspect you were a police spy the first time I then he relapsed into sulky silence.

Blogg claimed our attention next. He was lying upon the floor—stunned or dead, we knew not which. Gold was scattered all around him, for, in his fall, he had apparently dragged the half-opened bag with him. Dirk had torn open his vest, and was placing his ear over his heart, to ascertain if it were still beating, when he was startled by a succession of thunderous knocks at the hall door.

"It's police, sir!" cried Billy, rushing into the kitchen. "What am I ter do? Great Jericho! 'ere's a purty go!"

"Let them in, Billy," I replied. "Bring them down here, and then run for a doctor as hard as ever you can!"

CHAPTER XXI.

Bolts and Bars.

Speedily as Billy fled up stairs to obey my order, the hall door (being merely secured by a latch-lock) was forced before we could reach it, and he was hustled back to the kitchen with the assailants, three in number, who halted in blank amazement at the scene before their eyes. The detective, Bradshaw, and a constable in uniform, were in front of the third invader, whom I recognized as Spratt.

"What! You here, Mr. Weston?" exclaimed Bradshaw, finding his voice at last. "What in Heaven's name, does it all mean, sir?"

"Well, in the first place, it means a job for your comrade," I answered, pointing to the still writhing form of Philip Blake. "It also means work for an undertaker or a doctor, or both. And I think it means the solution, at last, of the great Arnewood Mystery. Constable, tell this boy where the nearest surgeon lives——"

"I know!" put in Spratt, eagerly. "I'll fetch him in two minutes!"

"No, you won't" corrected Bradshaw. "You'll stay with me, if it's all the same to you." I then noticed that Spratt was practically under arrest, although not handcuffed.

"I'm afraid I can't allow anyone to leave this kitchen, sir," protested the constable, looking extremely perplexed. "Perhaps Mr. Bradshaw wouldn't mind slipping round to the station—"

"You'd better hurry up with a doctor," growled Dirk, who still knelt beside Blogg, "if this man is to have a chance for his life."

"Then I'm off for one, and chance it!" cried Billy, making a successful dart for the stairs. "I'll let the traps at the station know!" he called out from the hall.

"I'll answer for the boy," I said to the harassed policeman "He'll keep his word. You'll have your inspector here soon, and, meanwhile, if you happen to have a pair of handcuffs, you might substitute them for the cord, which seems to be cuttin gthe gentleman's wriss. His name is Philp Blake. I charge him with complicity in the murder of 'Luke Arnewood,' and with the attempted murder, in my presence, of James Blogg, the man now lying unconscious."

Poor W1346 stared at me, open-mouthed, and then looked to Bradshaw for guidance.

"Do as you are told," said the latter, curtly. "I know Mr. Weston; he's almost one of us."

"I knew it!" shouted Blake, furiously. "My instinct told me that you were nothing but a dirty spy, and if I had but obeyed it, you'd never have left Dublin alive."

"Take notice that anything you may say—" began the constable. But the rest of the formula was drowned in the outcries of the prisoner, who appeared to be literally convulsed with rage.

Very briefly I explained to Bradshaw the reason of my presence there with Dirk, and of the tragic scene he had arrived in time to witness. With equal brevity he informed me that, having long shadowed Spratt, with no particular result, he had that evening followed the man, who was himself upon Blogg's track.

"When Blogg turned into the pathway leading to this house," he went on, "Spratt seemed to hesitate about following him. I'd made up my mind that if he entered the house I would, too, and I gave the constable on duty the office to follow me, seeing that Blogg is an awkward customer to tackle. Well, after a bit, Spratt passed through the gate, and me after him, to the hall door. There I just quietly grabbed his arm, and, getting no reply to our knocks, the constable just sent the door in with his shoulder. I kept hold of my man, and I mean to handcuff him before we leave him. I don't want you to give away your case, sir (for it's yours right enough now, I suppose), but I daresay I'm not far out in supposing that Spratt had a hand in the Greek Street business?"

"Yes," I assented, "that's certain; but to what extent I don't know myself yet, except that he stood in with Blogg to profit by the crime. It will come out clearly enough, I think, that it was Blogg who actually strangled 'Luke Arnewood' (or, rather, the man supposed to be Luke Arnewood)' and that Philip Blake bribed him to commit the murder. In fact, my friend and I overheard Blogg say as much, before he was knocked on the head."

"I'm afraid Inspector Traill won't be overpleased at the way things have turned out," rejoined Bradshaw, gloomily. "But it ain't my fault. I've obeyed orders and done my best, as I hope you'll bear out, sir."

"I'll say all I can for you," I assured him. "You arrived at a most opportune moment, and so forth. You'll get your full share of the credit, never fear, and Traill is very well able to take his own part."

Billy was not the boy to bungle over an errand, and when he returned, a sub-inspector, a surgeon, and four constables provided with a stretcher, came with him. The surgeon looked very grave when he had ascertained the nature of Blogg's injuries.

"It is an even chance whether the man ever speaks again," was the verdict. "An operation must be performed without delay, as I am satisfied that a portion of the fractured bone is pressing upon the brain. The workhouse infirmary is nearest. He must be carried with the utmost care. I'll accompany your men, inspector. Raise him very gently, please."

The four constables went with the injured man, and we formed a procession to the police station. But Blake, with a senseless obstinancy, rare in an educated man, absolutely refused to walk, and a second stretcher would have been necessary had not Dirk, with scant ceremony, thrown him across one of his herculean shoulders, to the intense delight of Billy. It was a full half-mile to the station, but Dirk made no more of his burden than a nurse-girl does of a baby. Fortunately, Rodney avenue is an out-of-the-way road, but little used, and we reached ous destination without attracting much public attention.

At the police station the proceedings were, first, of a formal character, and easily enough settled. The inspector on duty deemed it best to take Philip Blake into custody upon the charge of murderously assaulting James Blogg, in the sight of two witnesses, Dirk and myself. In reply to the usual question, Blake maintained a dogged silence, but offered a fierce resistance to being confiden in a cell. The events of the past hour appeared to have suddenly transformed him from a cool, calculating man of the world into a sullen desperado.

Spratt, Billy's especial aversion, proved to be what the boy contemptuously described as a "snivveller."

Bradshaw was rather hard-set to frame a specific charge against him, and had he faced the situation boldly he might, perforce, been allowed to depart. But he was not content to leave well enough alone, and proceeded to justify himself at Blogg's expense.

"Keep all that for the magistrate," remarked the inspector, drily. "I shall detain you as a suspected person and an associate, by your own admission, with the man Blogg." Whereupon, Mr. Spratt was removed to a cell, weeping loudly.

As for Blogg, he would, in the ordinary routine, be watched night and day by a constaule in the infirmary. The money was, of course, impounded by the inspector.

It was, perhaps, lucky for Dirk and myself that Bradshaw was with us, and was known to the inspector, who readily accepted his assurance as to my profession and connection with the case. It almost certainly saved us the annoyance of a detention, even if a brief one, pending inquiries.

The charges having eben duly entered, but not till then, o..cial routine demanded that notice of the arrest should be sent to headquarters.

"And now," remarked the inspector, with a grim smole, "you'll find 'We shan't be long!'"

We certainly were not kept long in suspense. Within five minutes of the dispatch of the message, back came a lengthy reply. This we were not privileged to see in its entirety, but we were favored with such portions as more particularly concerned ourselves. Bradshaw was to bring the prisoners, Blake and Spratt, under strong escort, to Bow Street, without loss of time. The divisional surgeon was o report as to the advisability or otherwise of removing Blogg to one of the large hospitals.

"As for you, Mr. Weston," added the inspector, very politely, "I accept your assurance that you will, in the interests of justice, proceed at once to Scotland Yard with Mr. Vanston and the boy. There is no mention of escort in your case," he added, with quiet humor.

"Very well," I answered, "you have my assurance to that effect. Eh, Dirk?"

"Why, of course," assented Dirk, good-humoredly. "I'm game for escort duty, if it comes to that."

* * * * * * * *

Inspector Traill received me somewhat coldly, whereat I was not at all surprised. However, as I had scored all the tricks, I was inclined to be generous, and endeavored to bring him back to our former friendly terms. I readily supplied him with such facts in the case as he required. Dirk and Billy answered all the questions put to them. And I thought that he had exhausted his inquiries, for the present, at all events, when he took me somewhat aback by asking me how long I had been acquainted with Tom Webb's wheabouts.

"About twenty-four hours," I answered. "Why?"

"Well," he explained, "it must surely strike you as a rather perilous thing to do to keep back such information from the police. Remember that, implicitly as you may believe in his innocence, this man has been branded by the coroner's jury as a murderer. And remember, also, that, although you may be the cleverest of inquiry agents, you are playing with edge-tools when—"

"You are permitting yourself the use of very forcible language, Mr. Traill," I rejoined, rather warmly. "I have conducted my case in my own way, and I am quite prepared to justify my every action before the proper tribunal. As regards Tom Webb, I certainly discovered his abode lost night; and I refrained from giving him into custody for several reasons. Apart from my belief in his innocence, he has become semi-idiotic, remembers nothing of the past, and is under careful guardianship. Moreover, had I acted as you say, I might have been detained today, giving evidence, and so forth——"

"And so have missed your grand coup this evening?" he put in, with a hard little laugh.

"Quite so," I assented, curtly.

"Oh! We could have seen to that on your information," he rejoined, cynically. "Besides, after all, you only forestalled Bradshaw."

"Do you think so? I had no intention, at all events, of making Scotland Yard a present of my work; and so I left Tom Webb in perfectly safe hands——"

"He is in perfectly safe hands now, I can assure you," interrupted the detective, icily. "He is in the Bow Street lock-up!"

Dirk Vanston started to his feet. "It i sa great shame!" he exclaimed, indignantly.

"There was another man with with him," continued Traill, ignoring this outburst, "described as of feeble intellect, who behaved so violently that he, also, was taken into custody, upon a technical charge of resisting the police, but, in reality, for his own protection."

"That's another big shame," growled Dirk, "though, perhaps, after all, it was best not to part them. Are they at Bow Street now? You see, they're under my charge; at least, I'm the only sort of guardian they've got."

"Yes," said Traill, relenting somewhat, for, despite his present ill-humor, he was good-earted at bottom; "but I think I can arrange bail for the other, if you wish it. As for Webb, he is under a warrant, and bail is impossible."

In the end, we all three went to Bow Street, and my bail being accepted, Neddy (as Dirk still called him) was liberated, to the latter's great joy. Webb, we learned, was sleeping so soundly that the gaoler could not properly awaken him, and we deemed it best to let him sleep on, in happy oblivion of his surroundings. Dirk then took his charge home.

"How did you chance to hear of Webb's whereabouts?" I inquired of Traill, when we were alone.

(To Be Continued.)

What Hitting a Mule Over the Head Had to Do With Making a Lawyer.

Illustrating what a trifling incident can influence a man's whole career, it is told of Judge William Lindsay, who is now United States senator from Kentucky, that when a young man, still in his teens, he was plowing in his father's field, which was near a crossroads store where a dozen or more men usually congregated. Young Lindsay and the mule he was working did not "gee" well, and finally, in trying to turn the mule around at the far side of the field, a worse misunderstanding than usual occurred. The mule turned square round and started back over the plow right at Lindsay, who grabbed a piece of fence rail and bit his big-eared servant a terrific jolt over the eye. The mule fell dead. Lindsay looked at the dead mule and then at the crowd across the field at the store. He saw that the men had witnessed his killing of the mule, and he started at full run to the store. When he reached there, almost out of breath, he exclaimed: "Gentlemen, I killed the mule, but I did it in self-defense!"

"By jingo, Bill, you ought to be a lawyer," said one of the men, "for anybody who can think of a plea of that sort on the spur of the moment would make a good one.'

That suggestion stuck in young Lindsay's mind—he did study law, became chief justice of Kentucky and one of the greatest lawyers the state ever had.

In 1896, when Lindsay, as senator, deserted his party on the silver issue, one of his old friends, who knew the mule incident, and who was angry at Lindsay for his course, said:

"Say, boys, ain't it a pity that Lindsay killed that mule?"—Cincinnati Enquirer.

INSECTS THAT GET DRUNK.

Dr. Weir's Experiments With the Pollen—Swallowed Half-Teaspoonful.

Yes, bumble bees, flies, butterflies and beetles are habitual drunkards, if the statements of a certain Dr. Weir are to be believed. He found that in some of the Southern states these insects alight on certain plants (Kosmos diversifolius and Kosmos bipinnatus), drink heartily from the calixes of the blossoms, fall prostrate on the ground, and, after a while, rise into the air and fly around like mad, just as drunken men would do if they could fly. Dr. Weir then collected the pollen of these plants, half a teaspoonful, to see whether it would affect a man in the same way. He swallowed this, and, after fifteen minutes, found that his pulse beat faster and there was a slight rise in the temperature of his body. Then he gathered the blossoms, distilled them in water, and administered a hypodermic injection in his left arm. Almost immediately the pulse was accelerated, and after half an hour he felt decidedly dizzy. By this observation of the insects, Dr. Weir was led to the discovery of an etherizing oil in these plants, affecting man and insect alike.

Substitute for Rubber.

The rubber supply of the world is running short, and people are asking where our future tires are to come from. Happily, there are one or two inventions before the public as a substitute for rubber. The nearest is "velvril," prepared from semi-dried linseed or castor oil. These oils are treated with nitric acid, forming what is called "nitrolinolein" or "nitroricinolein." This preparation is then mixed with nitrocellulose of a very low degree of nitration and the whole worked into a homogeneous mass.

In After Years.

"Why, what's the matter, Nellie?" asked her maiden aunt.

"Oh, auntie," replied the bride of a month, "it's too provoking for anything. Tom treats me as if I were a child."

"Well, don't mind a little thing like that, my dear," said the old lady; "when you get to be my age you will remember it with pleasure."—Chicago News.

She Walks in Beauty.

(Old Favorite Series.)

She walks in beauty like the night
Of cloudless climes and starry skies;
And all that's best of dark and bright
Meets in her aspect and her eyes;
Thus mellowed to that tender light
Which heaven to gaudy day denies.

One shade the more, one ray the less,
Had half impaired the nameless grace
Which waves in every raven tress,
Or softly lightens o'er her face—
Where thoughts serenely sweet express
How pure, how dear, their dwelling place.

And on that cheek, and o'er that brow,
So soft, so calm, yet eloquent,
The smiles that win, the tints that glow,
But tell of days in goodness spent,
A mind at peace with all below,
A heart whose love is innocent.
—Lord Byron.

How to Clean Ribbons.

Now that ribbons are so extensively worn it is quite worth while to know how to clean them successfully and easily. The two methods here given have been put to the practical test many times over, so there need be no hesitancy about trying either one through fear of failure or of unsatisfactory results. The first method is exceedingly simple, and answers the purpose for all except white ribbons or those that are very badly mussed. Fill in glass fruit jar about half full of gasoline—more or less, according to the amount of ribbon to be cleaned. Place the soiled ribbons in it—all colors, lengths and kinds may go in at once—and screw the cover on tightly. Shake the bottle occasionally and leave it closed for from two to six hours or over night. Then take out the ribbons, shake each one well and hang it to dry in the open air. The ribbons will be clean and the dirt will be found on the bottom of the jar. Of course, the ribbons need a thorough airing and sun bath to remove the odor of the gasoline, but that is all. No pressing is required, as the gasoline does not affect them as water would. The clear gasoline should be poured off without disturbing that at the bottom; then the dirt which has settled at the bottom should be emptied out and the clear gasoline put back, ready for use another time. Keep it tightly covered, and, of course, never use it near a fire, because of the danger of its igniting. The gasoline will turn white ribbons yellow, so this method is not advisable for them. It also leaves the ribbons in the same condition as it found them as regards their being mussed or crumpled, so those that are badly creased should be given the treatment that is accorded the white ribbons. Prepare a suds of soft water and any pure soap, wash the ribbon in this, just as you would wash a fine handkerchief, rinse and let it partially dry. Take it down while still damp in all parts and roll it smoothly over a wide card or piece of pasteboard, rolling a piece of clean white muslin with it. Wrap the muslin round last, so that the ribbon shall be covered, and place the whole under a heavy weight. A letter press is an excellent place in which to press it. Leave it until it shall have had time to dry. The muslin will absorb the moisture. The ribbon will come out looking fresh and clean, and will have lost none of its "life," as is the case with ribbons which are pressed with an iron. If a good soap is used the colors will not run, and this process takes out the creases as well as removes the dirt.

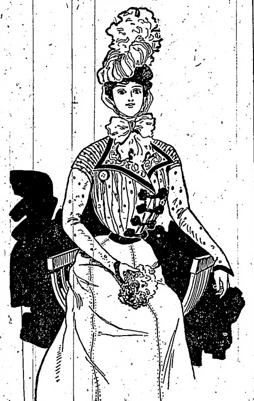
When You Hang Your Pictures.

By hanging pictures low you increase the apparent height of the room. Colored pictures should not be hung in hallways or on staircases unless there is plenty of light for them. In such places strong photographs, engravings, and drawings in black and white go best. A picture should not be hung from one nail; the diamond lines formed by the cord have a very discordant effect. Two nails, and two vertical cords, or, what is far more safe, pieces of wire cordage, should be used instead of the single cord. Picture cords should be as near the color of the wall upon which they are put as possible, so that they may be but little seen. When one picture is hung beneath another the bottom one should be hung from the one above, and not from the top; thus we avoid multiplying the cords, which is always objectionable. A good hue for walls where prints or photographs are to be hung, is a rich yellow brown or a leather color. Lustre to the black of the print of the tone of the photographs is thus imparted. The wall paper should have no strongly defined pattern. The center of the picture, as a rule, should not be much above the level of the eye.

Value of Space in Rooms.

The season is rapidly approaching when it may be necessary to move and for those intending to change their places of residence this little notice is prepared. In selecting new apartments it should be the aim of the housewife to economize on space. Where closets are scarce, a shelf fastened at a convenient height for gowns and hung with portiers or curtains of daintily figured cretonne, make a serviceable substitute. Fancy brass hooks are fastened to the outer side and the shelf can be enameled to harmonize with the furnishings of the room. On top are books and photographs, which mislead the casual observer. Any carpenter will put up the shelves for a mere song, as it were. A box couch in the dining room may do duty as a linen closet and in the library it may serve as a receptacle for old newspapers and books that are not in frequent use. In the bedroom the box couch can still be impressed into service as a repository for shoes or best bodices and evening gowns.

STYLISH WAIST.

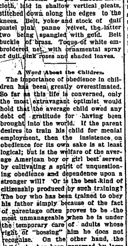


It is of embroidered crepe in the palest salmon tint, the dots being done in black silk. The decoration is composed of bias folds and rosettes of black mirroir velvet and revers of richly embroidered chiffon. Worn with this fascinating bodice was a dainty turban in all white chiffon, with fluffy strings tied at the throat in a smart bow.

Arranging Bric-a-Brac.

There can be no better decoration in a room than bric-a-brac, yet nothing so detracts from art as too much ornamentation. A New York society woman, who has recently started a bureau where women just beginning housekeeping go and get ideas as to how they can best furnish their homes, said to your correspondent a few days ago: "The best plan in the world when purchasing bric-a-brac is to buy nothing that has no visible sphere of usefulness, or if this seems too broad a rule, to purchase only one of a kind of the useless articles. No woman who cares for the appearance of her room will have two of every kind of article. This gives a sameness to its decorative effect that is indescribably inartistic. The day of 'matched' pieces is no more. Elegance consists in having things that are worth having, and just enough of them. If one takes to buying cheap china it will be found that it accumulates with startling rapidity, and in the end is only a nuisance."

Theatre Gown.



Dull reddish purple smooth-faced cloth, laid in shallow vertical pleats, stitched down along the edges to the knees. Belt, yoke and stock of dull pastel pink panne velvet, the latter two being spangled with gold. Belt buckle of brass. Toque of white embroidered net, with ornamental spray of dull pink roses and shaded leaves.

A Word About the Children.

The importance of obedience in children has been greatly overestimated. So far as this life is converned, only the most extravagant optimist would hold that the average child owed any debt of gratitude for having been brought into the world. If the parent desires to train his child for menial employment, then the insistence on obedience for its own sake is at least logical; but is the welfare of the average American boy or girl best served by cultivating a spirit of unquestioning obedience and dependence upon a stronger will? Or is the best kind of citizenship produced by such training? The boy who has been trained to obey his father simply because of the fact of parentage often proves to be the most unmanageable when he is under the temporary care of adults whose right of "bossing" him he does not recognize. On the other hand, the child who has been governed by laws which he understands and who has grown to regard his parents as his older and wiser friends is apt to be docile when in the care of strangers, and to accept as an obvious necessity a temporary dictatorship without explanation of orders when traveling or in similar emergencies.—Dr. A. L. Benedict in the February Woman's Home Companion.

Where Table Should Stand.

A table in a drawing room usually looks better if it is not placed in the center of the apartment. Let it be pushed away, and the chairs disposed in such a manner that it may be seen they are intended to be sat upon. Chairs placed against a wall or rammed into corners is an ugly and inappropriate arrangement. Have what the French call little etablissements in the room, if it be large enough. For instance, near small or large tables, have two or three chairs or a chair or a lounge, enabling those visitors, should several call at the same time, to talk comfortably, which it is impossible if a large party has to sit in a circle and join in a general conversation. A table upon which ornaments and books radiate in a star-like shape is very ugly. Let the books and ornaments be placed in studied carelessness, and avoid primness in every way.

The Wholesome Girl.

"Cleanliness and neatness go hand in hand in the care of the person, and one cannot be too particular as regards one's appearance in that respect. There is much truth in the Spanish proverb that 'no woman is ugly if she is well dressed.' There is more in the fact that the slovenly girl, no matter how great her beauty, is never an attractive object, and, as one grows older, one's inclination is to fall off in those little scrupulous niceties that glorify even a plain woman. Wholesome and sweet we can all be, even though nature has not given us a Grecian profile or the curves of a Venus."—New York Herald.

OUR COOKING SCHOOL.

Apple Ginger.

Take two pounds hard apples, two pounds loaf sugar, one and one-half pints of water, one ounce of tincture of ginger. Boil the sugar and water to a syrup, adding the ginger when it boils. Dip the pared and cored apples into cold water, and boil them in the syrup until transparent. Put the pieces of apples into a jar, pour over them the syrup and cover.

Fig Dumplings.

Mix half a pound of flour with a quarter of a pound of fine chopped suet. Add half a pound of figs chopped into small pieces, one tablespoonful of baking powder, and half a teaspoonful of sugar, and half a teaspoonful of allspice. Mix all these together thoroughly with a little water, divide into five or six dumplings, put into fast boiling water and cook for an hour and a half.

Steamed Lemon Pudding.

One teacup of self-raising flour, one teacupful breadcrumbs, one teacupful sugar, one teacupful of beef suet, three-quarters cup of sweet milk, the grated rind of a lemon. Mix and put in a buttered bowl, and tie a greased paper on the top. Put in a pan of boiling water, and let it boil for two hours. If a larger pudding be required, double the quantities, and the longer it is steamed the better it is.

Celery Fritters.

All the green stalks and tender leaves from the bunch of celery used for salad may be utilized in celery fritters. Clean and chop fine, and to one cupful of this chopped celery add one scant pint of flour, one beaten egg, one-half teaspoonful of salt, one-quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper, one teaspoonful of baking powder and sufficient milk to make a thick batter. This is dropped by spoonfuls into hot fat, and the fritters are drained on unglazed paper before being served.

ALABASTINE is the original and only durable wall coating, entirely different from all kalsomines. Ready for use in white or fourteen beautiful tints by adding cold water.

LADIES naturally prefer ALABASTINE for walls and ceilings, because it is pure, clean, durable. Put up in dry powdered form, in five-pound packages, with full directions.

ALL kalsomines are cheap, temporary preparations made from whiting, chalks, clays, etc., and stuck on walls with decaying animal glue. ALABASTINE is not a kalsomine.

BEWARE of the dealer who says he can sell you the "same thing" as ALABASTINE or "something just as good." He is either not posted or is trying to deceive you.

AND IN OFFERING something he has bought cheap and tries to sell on ALABASTINE'S demands, he may not realize the damage you will suffer by a kalsomine on your walls.

SENSIBLE dealers will not buy a lawsuit. Dealers risk one by selling and consumers by using infringement. Alabastine Co. own right to make wall coating to mix with cold water.

THE INTERIOR WALLS of every church and school should be coated only with pure, durable ALABASTINE. It safeguards health. Hundreds of tons used yearly for this work.

IN BUYING ALABASTINE, customers should avoid getting cheap kalsomines under different names. Insist on having our goods in packages and properly labeled.

NUISANCE of wall paper is obviated by ALABASTINE. It can be used on plastered walls, wood ceilings, brick or canvas. A child can brush it on. It does not rub or scale off.

ESTABLISHED in favor. Shun all imitations. Ask paint dealer or druggist for tint card. Write us for interesting booklet, free. ALABASTINE CO., Grand Rapids, Mich.

I Am Not a Bald Head

"I had a very severe sickness that took off all my hair. I purchased a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor and am glad to say that it brought my hair back again and I am not today obliged to be classed among the bald-heads." —W. D. Quinn, Marseilles, Ill., Aug. 25, 1899.

Makes Hair Grow

One thing is certain,—Ayer's Hair Vigor makes the hair grow. This is because it is a hair food. If it were a hair stimulant simply, it could not do this. You must have food to live; stimulants cannot take its place. Ayer's Hair Vigor feeds the hair and it grows. It could not do differently, for it's Nature's plan. It stops falling of the hair, too, takes out all dandruff, and always restores color to gray hair.

$1.00 a bottle. All druggists.

Write the Doctor

If you do not obtain all the benefits you desire from the use of the Vigor, write the Doctor about it. He will tell you just the right thing to do, and will send you his book on the Hair and Scalp if you request it. Address,

PRAISE FOR BULLER.

AMERICAN SEES IN HIM A GREAT CAMPAIGNER.

His Maneuverings Along the Tugela Said to Be Masterpieces of Field Strategy—Impregnability of Boer Position the Only Barrier to His Progress

Gen. Alexander S. Webb, president of the College of the City of New York, is one of the few living American authorities with actual experience in such hilltop fighting as is now going on between the British and the Boers in South Africa. When appointed in recognition of service in the field, he was the youngest major general in the United States army, and a West Pointer, who had held Little Round Top in the terrific charge of Pickett's Brigade at Gettysburg. It was Webb's division that sustained the brunt of the charge and turned it. Gen. Meade accorded to Gen. Webb the credit for the most important result of that three days' fight. The state of Pennsylvania presented Gen. Webb one of two medals it struck off for that victory.

"There is something like the Gettysburg region in the country about Ladysmith," said the general the other day. "James Bryce has told what a country it is, full of isolated hills, and covered with bowlders. Joubert knew the place he was choosing when he got there first to do the fighting. I tell you, it takes brains as well as 'fight' to win in such a country. They say Buller had fight in him when he was sent there. He has something else or he would have been annihilated long ago. One Boer behind a bowlder with a Mauser, you know, is good for a dozen British; and vice versa. The British have found that out, and Buller and Warren have given up frontal attacks and closer formation, except in necessity, and taken to Boer methods.

"What will be the outcome? Well, I am not going to predict. Both sides are good fighters. It remains to be seen whether numbers have also brains, without which numbers don't count. The Boers have the inside, as Lee had around Richmond, and Buller should take a lesson from Grant in the Richmond campaign—he has had his Cold Harbor."—Utica Globe.

FIVE QUEER PLACES.

Some Unique Spots in Different Countries of the World.

Doubtless the most unique spot in Europe is the little village of Altenberg, where on its border four countries meet. It is ruled by no monarch, has no soldiers, no police, and no taxes. Its inhabitants speak a curious jargon of French and German combined, and spend their days in farming the land or working in the valuable calamine mine of which it boasts. The little town of Stanley, in the Falkland islands, possesses the most unique school services ever known. Two traveling schoolmasters are provided by the government, who visits the different families where there are children and give instruction. The length of their visit depends on the astuteness of the children, and they may spend days or weeks, as the case may be, at one house alone. A town boasting of a railway station which cost $20,000 to erect, and a duly appointed station master, and yet having no train service, is unique beyond dispute. Dundee, in New Jersey, is in this predicament, the inhabitants having actually no trains, although their fine station is available for any amount of traffic, and the reason given for this strange fact is that so long as the trains runs through the inhabitants ought to be satisfied. There is a place in the middle of the Pacific ocean, well known to mariners, where there is never any Christmas day. This is owing to its being in the 180th degree of longitude and directly opposite to Greenwich, and, therefore, twelve hours ahead of Greenwich time. In a journey around the globe the other twelve hours would have to be marked out of the navigator's calendar, and if this point crossing the antipodes is touched Christmas eve then there can be no Christmas day. In one of the West India group there is a colony of some 800 whites and blacks where there are neither towns nor villages, nor fresh water supplies. In fact, there is such a scarcity of everything that the government has to send food and employment to the inhabitants to keep them from starving. Salt fish and sweet potatoes are the staple foods of the Anguillas, and the only water obtainable is brackish and tainted by the sea.—Answers.

Betrayed by Snap Shots.

A well-known photographer of New York recently had his country house overhauled. A new skylight was added and extensive alterations were made in the roof. The men engaged on the job took their time and did not overwork themselves, which did not prevent the roofer from presenting a bill almost as steep as his calling. When the owner of the house expostulated, it was explained to him that the men had to be paid for their time, and they had spent several days on the job. "No wonder," said the photographer, and then he produced a number of snapshot photographs, representing the men on the roof of his house, as taken from the attic window of an adjoining building. Some were sitting smoking, some were reading newspapers, and others were lying on their backs. "Why," said the astonished roofer, "these are my men." "Exactly," responded the owner, "and these pictures explain why they took such a long time over the job."

MANUFACTURE AMERICAN TEA

The only tea factory in the United States is located at Pinehurst, near Summerville, S. C. The picking of the leaf requires care and discrimination. The growing tea plant throws out from its branches tender, bright shoots frequently during the season. These new shoots constitute a "flush" and trained pickers must be at hand at each successive flush who are practiced in the art of nipping off the leaves. Only the tip of the shoot and the most tender leaves are taken. If only the tender, unexpanded leaf bud at the end of the shoot is picked the tea is called "flowery pekoe." If the first leaf, almost as tender as the bud, is added, it makes "orange pekoe." If the second leaf, slightly firmer, goes in, it becomes simply "pekoe" tea. The addition of the next two leaves on the stem makes "first" and "second" "souchong." After the leaves are weighed they are carried to the lofts, where they are spread over the clean, polished floor to be wilted. As soon as the leaves are withered to the right degree, which occurs in about six hours, they are put into the tea roller. This machine is run by steam and works with an oscillatory motion. It is of glistening copper, burnished inside and out until it shines like gold. During the rolling, which lasts about thirty minutes, the sap escapes and is spread all over the surface of the rolled leaf in a way favorable to the action of oxygen in the next stage—oxidation. When the leaf is released from the rolling machine it is found that a good deal of it is formed into balls varying from two to four inches in diameter, which must be broken up. After being broken the leaf is spread on trays well moistened and is then left to oxidize or ferment. The most important chemical transformation is that which takes place during the process of fermentation. It is absolutely necessary to check the fermentation at its first stage, which is done by firing. After fermentation, the leaf is subjected to a hot blast by being put through a drying or firing machine. This action arrests the oxidation at just the right stage. The tea is dried at the same time and turns black. As soon as it is cool the tea is sorted, weighed and packed in air-tight boxes.—Self-Culture.

NO NEED OF A DUEL.

Big American's Response to a Challenge from a Little Cuban.

Duels are getting to be more and more out of fashion in Havana, even among Cubans, but there is still an occasional native who attempts to redress his grievances against Americans by an appeal to the code. As a consequence the rash man generally gets sat upon heavily. One night recently a 220-pound American, more than six feet in height, went into an American saloon. There was a crowd at the bar, and the Yankee, without intending insult, pushed his weight in between two men so that he might get a drink. One of the chaps wedged out happened to be a little Cuban. Immediately he became extremely incensed at this high-handed outrage. Diving into his pocket with trembling hand, he pulled forth his card case and extracted a card. Then, with exaggerated courtesy, he tapped the big Yankee on the arm and presented him with the card. The American did not understand the Spanish accompaning the presentation, but he realized that he had been invited to meet the Cuban on the field. This having dawned upon him, he deliberately tore the card into four pieces, buttoned his coat, and reached for the challenger. Seizing his squarely padded shoulders, he lifted his 120 pounds right off the floor, shook him until his hat flew off and his necktie decorated his ears, and plumped him into a cane-bottomed chair with such a kerchunk that the breath fled from the little fellow's body. "Tut, tut!" said the big man. "Don't bother me again or I'll spank you!" Thereupon the American turned to the bar again, swallowed his drink, and strode out, while the Cuban meekly rearranged his toilet without another word. Having done this, he left the saloon, going in the opposite direction taken by the American.

Sheridan's Presence of Mind.

Among other great wits whose sayings have convulsed Britain's national assembly at Westminster probably none was quicker to seize upon an opening than Sheridan. At one time when he was a member of the opposition led by Fox, the practice of buying votes was having an alarming effect upon Fox's majorities. The individual responsible for this was the secretary of the treasury, one John Robinson, and vast sums of money were squandered by him upon this nefarious traffic. At length Sheridan could stand it no longer, and rising in his seat he one day led off with so passionate an impeachment of the system that the whole house rose as one man, with loud cries of "Name! name—or withdraw!" This was a position which Sheridan had scarcely bargained for, for none knew better than he how invidious a thing it would be did he publicly identify the individual with the deed. At the same time, so strongly did he feel upon the point that nothing short of his innate good breeding restrained him from taking the plunge. Then his kindly mother wit stepped in and saved him. "Gentlemen," said he, "were it not that respect for the traditions of this house seals my lips, I could name the gentleman as easily as you could say 'Jack Robinson.'"

Cheerfully Worded.

A Devonshire clergyman was lately compelled to dismiss a clever gardener, who used to purloin his fruit and vegetables. For the sake of his wife and family, he gave him a character, and this is how he worded it: "I hereby certify that A. B. has been my gardener for over two years, and that during that time he got more out of my garden than any man I ever employed."—Short Stories.

CALVE MAKES A CONFESSION.

Why Once She Wore Pads and Why She Has Never Since Worn Them.

Mme. Calve tells this story of herself: "When I went to the Theater de la Monnaie in Brussels, in 1881, I made my debut as Marguerite. My second performance was to be Cherubino. At that time I was very slight. My neck and arms were thin, and so, of course, were my legs. I did not think I could possibly appear in breeches without something to make me look a little plumper. So I went to the costumer of the theater and told him I wanted some pads. He made them according to his own ideas of what they should be, and sent them to me so late that I had no time to try them on. I don't know what I must have looked like when I stepped on the stage, thin and girlish from waist up, but provided with the most enormous calves.

"After the first act the manager rushed around to my dressing room. 'Gracious!' he exclaimed, 'where in the world did you get those legs? They certainly are not your own?' I admitted that they were not, and said I thought I was too thin to dispense with pads. 'Don't you know,' he said to me, 'that a young girl with straight, slender legs is far better suited to the part of a page than when she disfigures herself with such things as those? Take off the pads and go out on your own legs.' I determined to follow his advice. When I came on the stage again I was thin, but at least symmetrical.

"The effect on the audience was startling. I seemed to see the people in the theater craning their necks to discover what had happened to change me so. The conductor of the orchestra stared at me as if his eyes would pop out of his head. After a moment or two the cause of the astounding alteration in my looks seemed to be understood, and there was a titter of laughter throughout the audience. Since that time I have never worn pads."—Collier's Weekly.

Titled Lady Scrubbed the Officer.

There is an amusing story, which we give with all reserve, told of a titled lady who is at the seat of war with the laudable desire of nursing the sick and wounded. Her zeal, however, is exceeding her technical ability, and her principal occupation, so far, has consisted in washing the faces of the patients. One wounded officer, on whom she had bestowed this attention some ten times in the course of one afternoon, at last begged the doctor to interfere, pathetically adding that if he must die the results of a Boer bullet would prove a less painful ending than Lady ——'s continual scrubbing.—London Leader.

Two Letters from Women Helped Through the "Change of Life" by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—When I first wrote to you I was in a very bad condition. I was passing through the change of life, and the doctors said I had bladder and liver trouble. I had suffered for nine years. Doctors failed to do me any good. Since I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, my health has improved very much. I will gladly recommend your medicine to others and am sure that it will prove as great a blessing to them as it has to me."—MRS. GEO. H. JUNE, 901 DeKalb Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Relief Came Promptly

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I had been under treatment with the doctors for four years, and seemed to get no better, I thought I would try your medicine. My trouble was change of life, and I must say that I never had anything help me so much as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. Relief came almost immediately. I have better health now than I ever had. I feel like a new woman, perfectly strong. I give Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound all the credit, and would not do without her medicine for anything. I have recommended it to several of my friends. There is no need of women suffering so much for Mrs. Pinkham's remedies are a sure cure."—MAHALA BUTLER, Bridgewater, Ill.

Sore Hands

Red, Rough Hands, Itching, Burning Palms, and Painful Finger Ends.

One Night Treatment

Soak the hands on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of CUTICURA SOAP. Dry, and anoint freely with CUTICURA, the great skin cure and purest of emollients. Wear, during the night, old, loose kid gloves, with the finger ends cut off and air holes cut in the palms. For red, rough, chapped hands, dry, fissured, itching, feverish palms, with shapeless nails and painful finger ends, this treatment is simply wonderful, and points to a speedy cure of the most distressing cases when physicians and all else fail.

Sore Hands 8 Years Cured.

Pain So Intense Would Nearly Twist Fingers From Sockets. Hands Puffed Up Like a Toad. Water Ran Through Bandages to Floor. Had to Walk the Floor Until Would Fall Asleep. Fingers Would Peel Like an Onion. Doctors Could Not Cure.

Eight years ago I got sore hands, commencing with a burning sensation on my fingers and on top of the hand. When I rubbed them, you could see little white pimples. I felt like twisting my fingers out of their sockets. I had high fever, and cold chills ran over me, and so I kept it going until I was tired out. Nights, I had to walk the floor until I fell asleep. My hands peeled like an onion, the finger nails got loose, and the water ran out, and wherever there was a little pimple there the burning fire was. That happened at least ten times. I am running a blacksmith shop, horseshoeing, and I would not shut up the shop for anybody, but it was hard. My hands puffed up worse than a toad. When I drove horse nails, the water from my hands ran through the bandage, on to the floor. My customers refused to look at my hand. I had a friend take me to the doctor; he gave a solution of something to bathe my hands. I went to another doctor, I think, for a year. I found your advertisement in a Utica newspaper, and I got the CUTICURA remedies. As soon as I used them I began to gain; and after using a small quantity of them I was entirely cured. I would not take fifty dollars for a cake of CUTICURA SOAP if I could not get any more. I would not suffer any more as I did, for the whole country.

ROBERTS IS SILENT

BRITISH PUBLIC THIRSTING FOR NEWS FROM THE FRONT.

Conjecture as to the Reason for the Dearth of News—No Diminution of Confidence in Roberts—Public Ready to Believe He Has Good Reasons for Withholding Mention of Cronje—Buller's Advance Stubbornly Contested—Cronje Willing to Quit, but Young Boers Won't Let Him.

London, Feb 26.—Perhaps never before in the course of the present campaign have such crowds visited the war office as went there yesterday. As the Times remarked, "such dearth of news can only mean that success is imminent." No diminution of confidence in Lord Roberts is felt, however, and the public is ready to believe that he has good reasons for not mentioning Gen. Cronje in the official dispatches. Probably he is in no hurry to end a situation which daily brings parties of Boers in a vain effort to reinforce Gen. Cronje. These he can deal with in detail. Lord Roberts has already captured over 400 Boers, and at this rate he will soon have quit a respectable array of prisoners to hold as hostages for the 3,500 British already in Pretoria. Gen. Cronje's refusal to accept the offer of Lord Roberts regarding the women and children indicates either that the position is less desperate than is reported or that he has been able to dig an absolutely safe place for them. Everything goes to show that Gen. Buller's advance is most and most carefully thrown out. It is hoped he will soon be in a position where Gen. White will be able to assist him materially. The situation is now presenting a most interesting phase. In about a month the congress of the Afrikander bund will meet and it is then believed Mr. Hofmeyr will propose peace terms on the basis of the republics realizing absolute independence, but offering to disarm. If these terms are rejected it is understood a manifesto will be boldly issued to the Dutch throughout South Africa, calling upon them to throw off their allegiance to Great Britain. Probably these rumors are exaggerated, but there is no doubt that the greatest anxiety prevails in Cape Town regarding coming events. Germany, through the semi-official Berliner Post, reiterates that all reports of German interference are quite without foundation.

Cronje Is Ready to Quit.

Paardeberg, O. F. S., Feb. 26.—Gen. Cronje's position is more hopeless than ever. Our guns dominate the sloping ascents from the river on all sides, and by the rush of the Shropshires on Wednesday night up the river bed the Boers lost 200 yards space in their cover. Deserters say the British fire has been very deadly and affirm that Gen. Cronje himself is willing to surrender, but is overborne by the young Boers from the Transvaal. There are women and children with the Boer force. Gen. Roberts proposed to let them pass out of danger, but this suggestion, as well as the proffer of medical aid, has been rejected. The kopje captured by the British last Wednesday, when fifty prisoners were taken, is a most important strategical position. Its possession should enable us to repulse the Boer reinforcements from the eastward.

Occupied by British.

London, Feb. 26.—Lord Roberts has sent the following additional advices to the war office, dated at Paardeberg, Saturday p. m.: "Methuen reports that Barkley West was occupied by our troops on Feb. 22. The loyal inhabitants displayed great enthusiasm. The country west of the railway from Cape Town to Kimberley is gradually settling down. A detachment has started from De Aar for Britstown, and Douglass and Prieska will shortly be visited by our troops. Methuen's account of the admirable manner in which the Kimberley hospital is managed made me desire to send some of our sick and wounded there."

Boers Lose Heavily.

London, Feb. 26.—The war office published the following dispatch from Lord Roberts: "Parties of boers recently arrived from Natal attacked our outposts in force again yesterday. They lost a good many killed and wounded and nearly 100 prisoners, including a commandant and three field cornets. Our casualties were four officers wounded, nine men killed, twenty-three wounded and two men missing."

Uprising Threatened.

London, Feb. 26.—The Standard has the following from Cape Town, dated Saturday: "The Boer force occupying Prieska consists of 120 rebels, led by Free Staters. A proclamation has been read annexing the Prieska district to the Free State and all loyal British have been given five days to quit the place. I am assured by residents of Prieska that unless troops are soon sent there the whole northeast district will rise."

Scouts Compelled to Retire.

Sterstroom, Feb. 26.—A reconnaissance in force by Gen. Gatacre, with ten guns, found the Boers occupying a ridge three miles beyond Molteno, in the Stormberg direction. Montmorency's scouts charged the Boers, who crept around the scouts' flank, pouring in a deadly fire. The scouts were finally compelled to retire, having lost heavily, fourteen being missing, Capt. Montmorency being killed.

Urge Kruger to Sue for Peace.

London, Feb. 26.—The Lourenzo Marques correspondent of the Times says: The feeling among officials at Pretoria borders on consternation. Gen. Louis Botha and Pretrin are both urging President Kruger to sue for peace. At Bloemfontein Gen. Cronje's position is regarded as hopeless.

Rhodes Sees the End of It.

London, Feb. 26.—A dispatch to the Evening Post from Kimberley, dated Friday, says: "Gen. Cronje is reported to have plenty of provisions but to be running short of ammunition. Mr. Rhodes is extremely hopeful that the war has reached its concluding stage."

Buller Close to Ladysmith.

London, Feb. 26.—The Times has the following from Colenso: "The British are now within two miles of being in touch with Ladysmith, but the ground still to be covered is the hardest part and very severe fighting must be expected."

Arrested for Crying False News.

London—A news vender at North London was sentenced to a seven-day term in jail for crying false war news on the streets.

TERRIBLE FIRE IN PARIS.

One Hundred and Fifty Persons Injured by Explosions.

Paris, Feb. 26.—As the result of a fire that broke out at St. Ouen, a suburb of Paris, in a collection of alcohol and oil stores, a series of explosions occurred, spreading the flames until a block of sixteen immense warehouses were involved in a huge conflagration. A great concourse of spectators had assembled and had approached too near, when suddenly and unexpectedly the explosions occurred. A large number of people, including some firemen, were more or less injured. The last explosion occurred at 6 o'clock in the afternoon, when it was thought that such danger had been averted. Thirty persons were injured by flying debris. The official computation shows that 150 were hurt, quite a number seriously. Fortunately the flames did not reach immense reservoirs of petroleum. The loss is estimated at 2,000,000 francs.

The Cutch's Rough Trip.

Vancouver, B. C., Feb. 26. — The steamer Cutch arrived yesterday morning from Skagway after the roughest trip it has ever experienced. There were five feet of ice on its decks on Friday morning. Mountainous seas rolled over its bows and swept nearly from end to end of the steamer. Ice was even over its pilot house and the whistle pipes which ran half-way up the funnel, were shrouded in the ice. The weather was frightfully cold, and for two days passage across the decks had to be cut with axes.

Rev. Edward Lorenz Dead.

Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 26. — Rev. Edward Lorenz, editor of the German periodicals of the United Brethren church, and for more than forty years a prominent minister in that denomination, is dead as the result of a rupture of a blood vessel in his brain, occasioned by a paroxysm of coughing. He had charge of the missionary work in Germany for a number of years, and occupied pulpits in a number of American cities.

Confessed the Theft.

Washington, Feb. 26.—James Rooney, a young butler employed by C. A. Spalding, a wealthy St. Louis theater owner at No. 1079 Rhode Island avenue, was arrested yesterday charged with stealing more than $3,000 worth of silverware and bric-a-brac from the house of his employer. He confessed the theft, which covers more than a year. The property, which had been disposed of at pawnshops, was recovered.

Free-for-All Fight.

Louisville, Ky., Feb. 26.—A special to the Commercial from Whitesburg tells of a free-for-all fight near Pound's Gap in which one person was killed and several were injured. The trouble occurred during a dance at the home of Bill Mullins, a Virginia moonshiner. Pistols and knives were used in the scrimmage, which lasted until the place had been cleared of all but the wounded.

Harry Weldon Paralyzed.

Cincinnati, Feb. 26.—Harry Weldon, for twenty years the sporting editor of the Cincinnati Enquirer, in which capacity he won for himself and his paper a national reputation, was stricken with paralysis as he retired to his room at 3 o'clock this morning. His great weight, 300 pounds, is somewhat against him, yet his physician says his chances for recovery are good.

Many Men Thrown Out of Work.

Albany, N. Y., Feb. 26. — Fire destroyed the buildings of the Troy Malleable iron works yesterday. Loss, $125,000. The plant is located in the town of Colonee, just north of the Watervleit city boundary line and east of the Erie canal. Fully 1,000 employes will be thrown out of work and will suffer from enforced idleness probably for three months.

Carnival in Full Swing.

New Orleans, Feb. 26.—The New Orleans carnival of 1900 may now be said to be in full swing. Every hotel in the city is crowded or has its rooms engaged in advance; every arriving train is packed and the promise is for the largest crowd that has ever been present during Mardi Gras season in this city. The outlook is for cool and fair weather.

Baby Escapes Parents' Fate.

Decatur, Ind., Feb. 26. — A buggy containing W. Gilbert, wife and young baby was struck by the west-bound Chicago & Erie limited at the Mercer street crossing. Gilbert and wife were badly injured, and the trainmen, when they reached the depot, three blocks away, found the baby lying on the pilot of the engine, uninjured.

Henley Trip Abandoned.

Philadelphia, Feb. 27.—The proposed Henley trip by the University of Pennsylvania crew has been abandoned, the rowing committee having finally decided that such a trip would be impossible. The matter has been fully considered for some time and every endeavor was made to bring about a race in England.

Swedish Veterans Organize.

Chicago, Feb. 26. — Swedish-Americans who fought in the Civil and Spanish-American wars, both in the army and navy, held a meeting here yesterday and perfected an organization to be known as the Swedish-American Veterans' association. E. G. Dahl was elected president.

Egyptian Officers Cashiered.

Cairo, Feb. 26.—As a result of the investigation by a court of inquiry held at Obdurman in connection with the recent insubordination of two battalions of Soudanese troops five Egyptian officers have been cashiered and sent as prisoners to Cairo.

Wagner Theater for Berlin.

Berlin—Emperor William has interested himself in a project to give Berlin a Wagner theater, in which the works of this master and other serious operas will be presented.

CONGRESS

The House.

Washington, Feb 20. — The debate upon the Porto Rican tariff bill, which is to continue throughout the week, and possibly longer, opened in the house yesterday. It is generally agreed that this bill is the most important measure which will come before this congress. Interest in the bill is intense among the members on both sides, and there is urgent demand for time. The Democrats are solidly arrayed against the measure and they will have powerful support from the Republican side in McCall of Massachusetts and Littlefield of Maine, both able and forcible debaters. How far the Republican disaffection will extend or whether it will endanger the bill cannot be forecasted at this time. Mr. Payne, floor leader of the majority, objected to the taking of a vote on a substitute to be offered by the minority. This substitute, which has not yet been framed, will be in substance the bill originally introduced by Mr. Payne, providing for free trade with Porto Rico by the extension of the customs and revenue laws of the United States over the island. The debate yesterday lacked exciting features. It was in the nature of a long range bombardment before the clash of the contending forces in battle. Mr. Payne opened with a general argument in support of the bill going largely into the material side of the situation, which the bill is designed to relieve. Mr. Richardson, the minority leader, joined issues on the power of congress to enact the proposed legislation, and Mr. Dalzell of Pennsylvania backed up Mr. Payne with a constitutional and legal argument. All these were listened to with close attention.

The Senate.

A simple resolution of inquiry introduced in the senate yesterday by Mr. Hale of Maine precipitated an hours' constitutional debate by some of the ablest constitutional lawyers in the body on the authority of congress at its present session to extend or withhold the constitution to territory acquired by the United States. The bill providing a government for the territory of Hawaii was under consideration most of the afternoon, Mr. Cullom, in charge of the measure, explaining in detail its provisions. On convening the senate passed a bill for the relief of claimants having cases pending against the United States in the circuit and district courts affected by an act of 1808.

The House.

Washington, Feb. 21.—Again yesterday there were but three speeches in the house upon the Porto Rican tariff bill. Five hours were consumed in their delivery. Mr. Hopkins of Illinois spoke in support of the bill and Mr. Newlands of Nevada and Mr. Swanson of Virginia in opposition to it. The speakers devoted themselves almost exclusively to the constitutional question involved, and were listened to with attention. The Republican leaders are becoming nervous over the fate of the bill. They have only a majority of 14 over the opposition, which is solidly opposed to the measure. Eight votes from the Republican side would defeat it, and there are from 12 to 15 Republican votes in doubt. A movement for a Republican caucus is being agitated, and, although no call has been issued, the general understanding is that one will be held to-night. The Republicans reported to be opposed to the bill are Messrs. McCall of Massachusetts, Littlefield of Maine, Powers of Vermont, Tompkins of New York, Bromwell of Ohio, Lorimer of Illinois, Heatwole of Minnesota, Tongue of Oregon, Loud of California, Jones and Cushman of Washington and Crumpacker of Indiana.

The Senate.

The Philippine question was resumed in the senate yesterday, Mr. Kenney speaking against the retention of the islands and urging that the Filipinos be granted the privilege of governing themselves. After the passage of fifty-two pension bills and a number of bills on the general calendar, consideration was resumed of the Hawaiian government bill. Some amendments were introduced, but the consideration was not concluded.

The House.

Washington, Feb. 22.—For the first time in the debate upon the Porto Rican tariff bill the voice of a Republican was raised yesterday against the bill. Mr. Bromwell of Ohio spoke against the bill. He opposed it on the ground of policy, and not of constitutionality. His hostility, however, was not so absolute but that he announced his intention of voting for it, if the substitute failed. The other speakers were Mr. Ray of New York and Mr. Long of Kansas for the bill and Mr. Henry of Texas against it.

The Senate.

An effort is to be made to get the question involving the seating of Former Senator Quay of Pennsylvania formally before the senate for consideration. Mr. Penrose of Pennsylvania gave notice yesterday that he would call up the case to-day. As it is a privileged question he may be able to secure a vote on the taking up of the case for consideration and thus develop the Quay strength in the senate, at least approximately. During the greater part of yesterday's session the Hawaiian government bill was under consideration, but little progress was made.

The House.

Washington, Feb. 23. — The debate on the Porto Rican tariff bill brought out several notable speeches in the house yesterday, including one by Representative Grosvenor of Ohio, who answered a number of questions as to the attitude of the president, another by Mr. McCall of Massachusetts, the Republican member of the ways and means committee who dissented from the committee report, Mr. Moody, another Massachusetts member, who sharply criticised the position of his colleague, Mr. McClellan of New York, and Mr. Brantley of Georgia also spoke against the bill, and Mr. Parker of New Jersey in support of it. The debate was continued at a night session.

The Senate.

In accordance with a tacit agreement with the senators who were unable, on account of the meeting of the Democratic national committee, to attend yesterday's session, Mr. Penrose refrained from calling up the Quay case as he had previously announced he would do. When he announced, however, his intention to call it up today, a brief parliamentary squabble ensued as to the rights by which the case would come before the senate. No conclusion was reached, the question involved being postponed for consideration until to-day.

The Senate.

Washington, Feb. 24. — Yesterday's session of the senate was unusually interesting from the very beginning. In spite of vigorous and influential opposition Mr. Penrose of Pennsylvania succeeded in getting the Quay question before the senate, and during the afternoon three notable speeches were delivered. After a sharp parliamentary squabble Mr. Penrose moved that the resolution involving the seating of Mr. Quay be taken up for consideration. On an aye and noe vote the motion prevailed, 34 to 23. The majority was so decisive as to cause some surprise. It is known that some senators will vote, if the opportunity be offered, against seating Mr. Quay, who voted for taking up the case yesterday, while, on the contrary, some who voted against it, will vote to seat him. So the vote cannot be taken as indicating a test of strength. In taking up the resolution Mr. Daniel of Virginia delivered a speech in which he vigorously supported Mr. Quay's right to a seat. Mr. Vest of Missouri and Mr. Foraker of Ohio delivered notable speeches anent the Hawaiian government bill. Both were constitutional arguments, Mr. Foraker's being a reply to that of Mr. Vest's.

The House.

An agreement was reached in the house yesterday that the vote on the Porto Rican tariff bill be taken up at 8 p. m. next Tuesday, general debate to close Monday.

The speech of Mr. Littlefield of Maine was the feature of the day. He added to his laurels won in the Roberts debate by a speech against the bill, which for brilliancy, wit and logic rivals the best efforts of the recognized orators of the house. He made a profound impression, and when he concluded it was several minutes before the demonstration that followed could be quelled. Among the others who spoke were Messrs. Jones of Virginia and Maddox of Georgia, against the bill, and Messrs. Russell of Connecticut, Bartholdt of Missouri, Gardiner of Michigan, Lacey of Iowa for it. The debate continued for a night session.

Washington, Feb. 26.—The debate on the Porto Rican bill in the house of representatives Saturday brought out a speech by Representative Tawney of Minnesota, scoring Mr. Littlefield of Maine, for his speech of the day before, and also two speeches from the Republican side by Mr. Tompkins of New York and Mr. Powers of Vermont opposing the bill. Mr. Thayer of Massachusetts closed the day with a defense of the anti-imperialists. The other speakers were Mr. Eddy of Minnesota, for the bill and Messrs. Clayton of Alabama and Broussard of Louisiana, against it.

The Senate.

Throughout the session Saturday the senate had under consideration the Hawaiian government bill. The discussion took a wide range, but the basis of it was an amendment offered by Mr. Platt of Connecticut, providing that the president should appoint the chief justice and justices of the supreme court and judges of the circuit courts, and that the governor of the territory should appoint the other officers; the amendment limiting the tenure of office of appointees to four years. Mr. Tillman of South Carolina embraced the opportunity to make a speech in the course of which he made an attack on Mr. Morgan of Alabama, and vigorously opposed many provisions of the bill, particularly those which related to suffrage.

News of the Northwest

"LONG" JONES OUT FOR IT.

Would Be Governor of Wisconsin—Has a Reputation for Electing Others.

Milwaukee, Feb. 25.—A. M. ("Long") Jones, known to fame as the man who made two United States senators, is a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor of Wisconsin. He made the announcement yesterday, and his campaign is already under way, with all his accustomed vigor. Mr. Jones was chairman of the Illinois Republican state committee during the Logan senatorial contest and engineered the famous "still hunt" which broke the legislative deadlock and resulted in the election of the "Black Eagle." Wisconsin knows him best as the successful manager of the senatorial fight for Joseph V. Quarles at Madison last winter. He is now a resident of Waukesha and a member of the Wisconsin senate.

FIRE DESTROYS FIVE HOUSES.

Chinook, Mont., Suffers Loss—Hotel and Other Business Houses Are Burned.

Chinook, Mont., Feb. 25.—Fire broke out in one of the rooms of the Chinook house, owned by Mrs. S. A. Cook, and destroyed the entire building and part of the furniture and fixtures; it also destroyed J. V. Carroll's building, occupied by Dowen & Price, as a saloon and H. L. Ronne as a barber shop; also the millinery shop and drug store of J. E. Lewis and residence of John Houston. This is the most destructive fire Chinook has ever had, and represents a loss of between $15,000 and $20,000, with insurance on all the buildings not to exceed $6,000 or $7,000.

PASSENGERS FRIGHTENED.

Breaking of a Steam Pipe Causes a Commotion.

Stanley, Wis., Feb. 25.—An excited lot of passengers were those in the first-class train yesterday morning, shortly after passing the scene of Wednesday's wreck a loud explosion occurred in the first-class coach, being caused by the bursting of the steam radiator in the front of the car, immediately filling the car with steam. The passengers hurriedly rushed for the sleeper in the rear. Mr. H. B. Zald of St. Paul had his left arm injured in the scramble to get out, the lights having been put out by the escaping steam.

BESIDE A DYING WOMAN'S BED.

Impromptu Marriage Ceremony in South Minneapolis.

Red Wing, Minn., Feb. 25.—A rather romantic marriage took place in South Minneapolis when Miss Emma Hegna and Albert J. Lindquist were married. They have been engaged for some time and the wedding was set for March 14. Mrs. O. Hegna, mother of the bride, was seriously ill, and learning that Prof. M. G. Hanson, principal of the Red Wing seminary, who is also a relative, was visiting near by, he was sent for and the ceremony was performed at the bedside of the dying woman.

PICKAX THROUGH HIS HEAD.

Atrocious Murder of Bogner to Be Cleared Up If Possible.

Big Timber, Mont., Feb. 25.—The officers of the Montana Sandstone company will investigate the murder of their engineer, Joseph Bogner. A more atrocious crime would be hard to imagine. The pickax which was used went full length into Bogner's head. Suspicion rests on his old chum, a man by the name of Beck, who has disappeared from Columbus. Bogner's pockets were found turned inside out and no trace was found of any money, which he always carried with him.

Will Have Another Grain Palace.

Aberdeen, S. D., Feb. 25.—The stockholders of the Interstate Grain Palace association of this city held an enthusiastic meeting last evening and, after settling accounts for last year, decided to hold another exposition in 1900. The secretary's reports showed that the receipts for 1899 were $4,630, including $1,071 from the guarantee fund put up by citizens, while the expenditures were $45.41 less, leaving that amount in the treasury.

Arrested for Burglary.

Sauk Rapids, Minn., Feb. 25.—Henry Lane was arrested on a warrant charging him with burglary in the third degree and larceny. The offense was committed the night before, he having forced an entrance into Hall Bros.' store at Foley and stolen an overcoat of the value of $25. He pleaded guilty and was bound over to the grand jury.

Appeal From Action of Council.

Albert Lea, Minn., Feb. 25.—A few weeks ago the city council went through the form of vacating some parts of streets and alleys so that they might be used by the Albert Lea & Southern railway, but now comes Mary Nelson and Scott Elben, who own property adjacent to the vacated streets, and appeal from the action of the council. The matter will have to be adjusted by the courts.

Paying Their Taxes.

Bismarck, N. D., Feb. 25.—The collection of taxes by the state for the month of February will be the largest in the history of the state. Collections for the general fund will exceed $200,000. This places the state again on a cash basis, and all current bills with the state auditor will be paid within a week.

Horses Burned.

La Porte City, Iowa, Feb. 25.—J. M. Hileman's large barn and contents were destroyed by fire. Four thoroughbred trotting horses and one Shetland pony were burned. Loss over $5,000; insurance about $1,500.

Suicide at Northfield.

Northfield, Minn., Feb. 25. — Ole Thompson, a section hand on the Milwaukee road at this place, took a dose of strychnine and carbolic acid Thursday and died during the afternoon.

Grocers Elect Officers.

Waseca, Minn., Feb. 25.—The state grocers' convention adjourned sine die yesterday. The election of officers resulted as follows: President, P. G. Hanson, Minneapolis; first vice president, Simon Clark, Duluth; second vice president, H. F. Bullens, Excelsior; third vice president, G. O. Haskell, Stillwater; treasurer, Charles F. Rappe, St. Paul; attorney, J. H. Beek, St. Paul; secretary J. H. Tenvoorde, St. Paul. All of the officers were elected by acclamation and with much enthusiasm.

ONE YEAR FOR SANDERS.

North Dakota Man Begins a Term at Bismarck.

Henry Sanders of Sheyenne was taken to the penitentiary by Sheriff Carroll of New Rockford. Sanders was convicted for stealing flax from a neighbor's granary and Judge Glaspell gave him a year in the penitentiary.

Peter Arndt, who resides northeast, was seriously injured while at work in the bottom of an eighty-foot well. A bucket weighing about eighty pounds became unfastened and fell, striking Arndt. He sustained serious wounds on the head and shoulders and was unconscious for some time.

ASSAULT ENDS IN A MURDER.

Result of What Was Evidently a Drunken Row.

Minneapolis, Feb. 27.—As the result of an apparently brutal and unprovoked assault Thomas G. Hultgren, a barber, died at the city hospital early last evening. Edward Golden and Thomas Karland, who is also known as Thompson, are in custody, charged with Hultgren's death, while Lizzie Smith and Jessie Smith are held by the police as witnesses. The case is as yet partly shrouded in mystery.

Killed With His Team.

Yankton, S. D., Feb. 27.—Saturday night the body of Adolph A. Gleich was found in a deep gulch near his home, twelve miles west of here. He was after wood, and in driving along the edge of a steep ravine his team probably slipped and all went to the bottom, forty or fifty feet deep. Mr. Gleich's head was crushed in and both horses were killed. He had been missing for two or three days. He was seventy-three years old and one of the oldest German farmers in Yankton county.

Instruction for Supervisors.

Des Moines, Iowa, Feb. 25. — The census supervisors of Iowa, with those from South Dakota, Eastern Nebraska and Southern Minnesota, met here yesterday with Assistant Director F. H. Wines to receive instructions in their work. There were present 11 from Iowa, 2 from Minnesota, 2 from South Dakota and 1 from North Dakota. Mr. Wines explained the blanks which will be used and instructed them in the details of duties of enumerators. He says that in this group of states the enumerators will be given about 1,500 of population each.

Off a Bridge.

Lenora, Iowa, Feb. 25.—While Peter Humphrey, township assessor, was driving north of town and crossing the county bridge his horse became choked by the breaststrap, staggered and fell over the embankment, taking the sleigh and himself, as well as three school children whom he was giving a ride, down about ten feet to the frozen ground and ice below. He was so badly hurt that he could not stand and has been taken to his home at Monona. It is thought that his hip is seriously hurt. The children were not injured.

Prisoners Burned to Death.

Forest City, Ark., Feb. 27. — Frank Hogan and Charles Norris, prisoners at the station house here, were burned to death. The fire is supposed to have been started by the men in attempt to keep warm. The men were imprisoned for minor offenses and little is known of them except that Norris was an Arkansas lumberman and Hogan a bricklayer, supposed to have come from St. Paul, Minn.

Killed by a Fly Wheel.

Duluth, Minn., Feb. 27.—At Eveleth the fly-wheel of the engine of the electric light station burst and C. H. Webster, the proprietor of the plant, was killed by the flying pieces. One of the men employed about the plant was injured, but will recover. Mr. Webster had been a resident of the Mesaba range for five or six years, and was one of its substantial business men.

Great Scarcity of Labor.

agents here say there is a scarcity of Milwaukee, Wis., Feb. 27. — Labor labor such as has not been known for years. It is almost impossible to get money for work in the northern woods. At Fort Benton, Mont., the Great Northern railroad is building a cut-off, and it has been found impossible to supply all the men wanted on the work.

Studying Chronic Insane Treatment.

Madison, Wis., Feb. 25. — Secretary James F. Jackson, of the Minnesota board of corrections and charities, accompanied by two superintendents of new Minnesota asylums, arrived here yesterday to begin an investigation of the Wisconsin system of caring for the chronic insane, with President Lyon, of the state board of control.

Minneapolis Man Killed.

Royalton, Minn., Feb. 27.—A report has been received here that Alfred Louis of Minneapolis was accidentally killed in the woods one day last week. He was working for McNeal Bros. at their camp on Swan river, and was felling a tree at the time of the accident, a dry limb from which struck him on the head.

No New Smallpox Cases.

Northfield, Minn., Feb. 27.—No new cases of smallpox have developed in the past four days and all the five patients are doing well, the disease taking the form of varioloid.

McCourt Is Acquitted.

Jefferson, Wis., Feb. 27. — George McCourt, accused of the murder of John Roehl, was acquitted. McCourt claimed he was attacked by four Roehl boys, and the blow which killed John Roehl was struck by McCourt's son, Philip, who came to his assistance.

Mills Blown to Atoms.

Platteville, Wis., Feb. 27. — The Plattville powder mills were wrecked by an explosion, killing three men and badly injuring another.

Fargo Is Growing.

Fargo, N. D., Feb. 27.—An interview with local architects and contractors indicates that building during this spring will be almost as lively as last year. The prices of building material, while much in excess of the last few years, are practically back where they were in 1892 in this vicinity.

Ex-Sheriff's House Burns.

Brainerd, Minn., Feb. 27.—Ex-Sheriff H. Spalding's fine residence at Lakeview, five miles from the city, was destroyed by fire, with its contents. The loss was over $5,000; insurance $3,700.

LAND MARKET MOVES NORTH.

State's Spring Sales in the Middle Western Counties.

First steps have been taken in Auditor Dunn's office for the spring sales of state lands. Last fall there was a clearing sale in the southern tier of counties. This spring the sale will begin where the other left off and take in the lands in the middle of the western belt of counties from Chippewa and Lac qui Parle to Otter Tail and Clay.

In the southern counties in the Seventh district there is a good many pieces delinquent. A clearing sale would probably be as successful as it was in Southern Minnesota. In Clay county there is also a good deal of land delinquent, and since an opportunity to square up has been given, Auditor Dunn feels under no obligation to be tender with the holders. A chance to redeem the contract will be given, however, according to usage, up to the day of the sale.

Otter Tail is the county that has probably the largest settlement of any in Minnesota in the last three or four years, and acres are acres up there now. A new appraisement will be made this spring, and it is supposed that the land will be substantially all disposed of within the four years within which the appraisement is effective. After that a new valuation has to be made. Probably it will be sold for there is an active demand for land in the park region. Stearns is also to be put on the market. Hubbard and Todd and Wadena are newer counties, and Auditor Dunn thinks they can as well wait there.

There is also a little land to be sold in Aitkin and Crow Wing. As farming propositions these counties are in their infancy, and the sale will not be pressed, but pieces that are on the edge of the market will be offered.

FIGHT WITH A MANIAC.

Section Boss Peterson Is Badly Cut While Saving His Daughter.

Frank Peterson, section boss at Mile Post No. 18 on the Duluth & Iron Range road, is in a hospital at Duluth to receive medical attendance made necessary by a desperate struggle with a maniac named Louis Larson. Larson possessed himself of a butcher knife and drove Peterson's daughter into a corner, telling her there were bad men about. The girl is seventeen years old, and is in a very nervous condition as a result of her fright. Peterson soon discovered Larson's actions, but the latter showed fight. The men engaged in a struggle in which Peterson came off second best. The fight drew other men to the scene and Larsen was overpowered and bound to a tree. Peterson is badly cut about the head. It is said that Larson has a brother in the asylum.

One of the biggest lumber deals ever made in the Northwest has just been consummated at Duluth. W. H. Gilbert of Ashland has sold to Cleveland parties 50,000,000 to 55,000,000 feet of lumber for delivery during the coming season of navigation. It is log-run stuff, and the deal will involve between $650,000 and $700,000. About 30,000,000 of the sale will be manufactured in Duluth and 20,000,000 to 25,000,000 will be manufactured in Ashland.

$600 IN DAMAGE DONE.

Plate Glass Windows Blown Out and Floor Lifted.

The acetylene gas plant in S. J. Stebbins & Co.'s store at Morris exploded, recently, doing about $600 damage. One of the tanks had sprung a leak and Mr. Orr, the firm's tinner and plumber, went into the basement to locate the trouble. He let out all the gas from the tanks, as he thought, and after waiting for it to diffuse through the basement so as not to be dangerous, he lighted a candle and approached the tank. Gas had remained in some places, for an explosion occurred, knocking him down. The compressed air in the basement communicated through the elevator its compressed force to the air in the storeroom above, which, in turn, blew into very small pieces the entire plate-glass front and also bulged the rear of the building almost an inch out of plumb.

Persons in the offices on the ground floor state that the floor seemed to raise up a foot, and that they thought there was an earthquake. Mr. Orr miraculously escaped with only some burns on his face and hands, though one of his eyes may be lost. With the force displayed by the small amount of gas, citizens are wondering what would have happened had the entire plant gone up.

RECALCITRANT BEAR ISLANDERS.

Refused to Recognize the Authority of the Native Police.

Reports appear to have been suppressed of the recent Chippewa scare at Walker. The Bear Island reds began drinking last Saturday, initiated a dance, and finally refused to acknowledge the authority of the native police. Lieut. Jamison, in command of the company of the Seventh infantry, stationed at Walker, was appealed to, and put his men under arms. The night was passed with all his force ready to respond at the first alarm. Sunday, however, the temper of the Indians became somewhat mollified, and they submitted to the agency authorities.

The December report of the Northern Pacific Beneficial association shows that the insane of the Brainerd and Missoula hospitals was over $8,000 for the month. During the first four weeks 106 surgical cases were treated in the Brainerd institution.

GOOD BALANCE AGAIN.

State Treasury Overcome the Midwinter Deficit.

With the payment of $190,000 by the Northern Pacific the other day the state treasury got out of its annual midwinter straits. In January the general fund dipped into other funds to the amount of $200,000, and the first of February it was necessary to go to the banks for about $150,000 to meet the monthly bills. The borrowed money was used for about three weeks.

The payments put the treasury balance on the right side, and left a margin of nearly $150,000 in the general fund. Railway taxes are now depended upon to carry the treasury until the next settlement period with the counties.

Kearsarge to be Flagship.

Washington—The Kearsarge, the largest and most powerful warship owned by the United States government, it to become the flagship of the North Atlantic squadron, to take the place of the cruiser New York. It is said the change will be made as soon as the squadron returns to the North.

Shipwreck at Sardinia.

Madrid—A storm off Cape Spartivento, the southernmost point of the Island of Sardinia, wrecked the ship Duefratelli. A passing steamer, the San Serro, saved the entire crew.

$16.75 Warranted High Grade

We Dare to Describe All Our Sewing Machines, a thing that dealers in cheap rattle-traps dare not do. We sell you a high-grade machine at less than [illegible] factory list, calculating that each machine put [illegible] will sell many others for us without great expense. This machine—Corella No. 4—is constructed of the best material in use, every bearing being of steel or case-hardened. The woodwork is of best quality, either Light Antique or Golden Oak finish. The motion is easy and light. It does not vibrate. It is a lock-stitch shuttle. The operation of the feed mechanism is positive, giving an accurate 4-motion movement to the feed without the use of springs. It has a self-lubricating needle-bar, which is always kept clean, well oiled, and the oil cannot drop on the work. The needle is absolutely self-setting. There is but one hole to thread through—the needle's eye. It is thoroughly inspected and tested before leaving the factory, and is strongly crated, each being accompanied by the factory warranty for 10 years. Accessories and Attachments complete free. TERMS: $4.00 cash with order; balance C. O. D. At our remarkably close price this machine (usually sold at $25 to $35) will sell itself at sight. Your friends need but to see it to buy it. Customers may retain $1.00 from every cash order they send us (remitting $15.75 net).

SPECIALISTS FAILED.

Mrs. C. A. Merrill, of Chetopa, Kans., suffered from a peculiar nervous trouble which baffled the skill of leading specialists. She says: "I cannot say enough in praise of Dr. Miles' Nervine. I suffered agonizing pain in left side of my head and I thought it would drive me insane. Specialists in Cincinnati and Kansas City treated me without benefit. Then I began taking Dr. Miles' Nervine and obtained prompt relief, and finally a permanent cure."

THE LIFE INSURANCE CURE.

A Dying Bachelor Who Became Interested in a Plan for a Novel Funeral.

"I don't know that life insurance is a cure for disease," said the retired life insurance solicitor, "but I know of an instance which makes it look that way. In the town where I first began business was a bachelor of about 50 years, who was quite alone in the world, and had some years before taken out a five-thousand-dollar policy on himself for the benefit of a maiden sister, who had died a year before the events of this story. He kept his policy going, however, because it was a good way to save money, and one day he was taken down with some kind of fever. He grew worse day after day, until one day the doctor told him that he would in all likelihood be dead within the next twenty-four hours. This suggested his life insurance money, all he had to leave, and he immediately began to talk with the doctor on the subject of a proper disposal of it. He concluded after some thought that the best thing to do with it was to blow it in on a tremendous big funeral for himself, including a banquet for all the people he knew. This was an entirely new idea for a funeral, and when the doctor left him that night to the care of his nurse his mind was entirely occupied with his funeral. He talked to the nurse about it and when the nurse made him stop he lay and thought about it. In fact, he became so much interested in the details of his funeral that he quite forgot about having to die to make it possible. In the morning when the doctor came he found his patient in a wild perspiration and his pulse beating in much better fashion than it had been going for some days. He also found the general condition of the patient much improved. He was greatly astonished, and at once began to ask questions. The patient told him with eager interest of a lot of new things he had thought of for the funeral and something that bothered him a good deal and said he had been thinking of it all night. Then the doctor laughed and told him he guessed the funeral would have to be postponed, for he wasn't going to die, just then anyhow. Nor did he, and he isn't dead yet, but he is married and has his policy paid up for his wife's benefit."

SMALL PIPES

And Mild Tobacco Satisfy the Desires of Japanese Smokers.

Washington Star: "You may have noticed that the Japanese who visit America are very moderate smokers," said a prominent Japanese now traveling in the United States. "Those of my countrymen who indulge in the weed mostly smoke cigarettes or preferably the smallest pipes filled with the mildest tobacco obtainable. Of course, there are Japanese who, like some Americans, have such a craving for tobacco that nothing less than the strongest cigar or the largest pipe will satisfy them. But such smokers are exceptionally few among the Japanese. As a rule, my countrymen, while at home and abroad, are satisfied with short smokes, such as a cigarette or a tiny pipe affords. The Japanese are moderate smokers, not so much because they are small people, but for the reason that up to within recent years but very little tobacco came into Japan and the tariff on it was very high. Being a poor but frugal race, the masses purchased only limited quantities of the weed, which, as a matter of economy, they have for generations been taught to smoke in only the tiniest of pipes. These pipes, the most popular of which hold about as much tobacco as would fill an ordinary thimble, are the survival of the days when money was scarce, tobacco dear and the tariff high. In another generation or two, when Japan shall have taken her place among the wealthy nations of the world, my countrymen will no doubt smoke large quantities of tobacco, and then the small pipes will be abandoned for big ones, such as Englishmen and Americans now smoke."

How Women Dress in Siberia.

Common-class women in Siberia wear shawls or kerchiefs on their heads while the rich women wear no head covering whatever. A traveler recently returned from that part of the world says that a Russian woman who is otherwise trim and modern in dress will go about with her hair disheveled to the point of the ludicrous. Less attention is paid to the head and feet than to other parts of their toilet. "It is odd enough to see them," says this same writer, "defying dripping decks and muddy roads in the thinnest of heelless slippers, while the breezes play havoc with the loose tresses of their hair. Their shirtwaist is a feminine terror, with a broad turnover collar, fancy cuffs, cotton bows, many buttons and numerous frills, in place of the natty American shirtwaist."

A Theater for Workingmen.

Arthur Krupp, a cousin of the great German iron founder, erected a theater a year ago in Berndorf, Austria, for the benefit of the workmen employed in his great steel works at that place. It was to have been dedicated by the Empress Elizabeth, but her assassination occurred just before the time set for the ceremonies. Recently Emperor Francis Joseph formally opened it in the presence of a great crowd. The theater is small, seating but 500 but it is described as being very beautiful in its decorations and adornments and most complete for the purposes to which it is to be devoted.

EASY LIFE IN NICARAGUA.

When the Family Is Out of Money Somebody Goes Out and Gets a Little Gold.

From the New Orleans Times-Democrat: "When I was in the Olancho district, in Nicaragua, last month," said a visitor who is largely interesting in mining in Central America, "I had an opportunity of seeing how the lazy natives tap nature's till when they need some small change. Near our camp by the river was a hut occupied by a typical Honduranian family, consisting of husband and wife, grandfather and grandmother, and a dozen or so assorted children. The only one of the crowd who did anything except rest and smoke was the wife. At intervals of perhaps a week she would sally out with the family tin-pan, erstwhile used for cooking, and proceed to an old placer digging on the river bank. There she would squat, throw a few gourds full of dirt into the pan, fill it up with water and begin the usual circular motion of gold-washing. She was very skillful and would keep a little sheet of dirty water spraying over the edge like a miniature cataract. When the water was exhausted a few spoonsful of sand would be left in the bottom of the pan, and, spreading it out thin, with a bit of stick, she would go over it, grain by grain, looking for 'color.' Whenever she saw a speck of gold she moistened the stick upon her tongue and picked up the particle by adhesion. Each bit of the precious metal was stored away in a quill plugged with clay at the ends, and I have know her to take out as much as a quarter of an ounce in the course of a day. Usually her limit was about $2, and when she got that she stopped. Then the head of the house would arise languidly and start for the nearest store twelve miles away. Sometimes he would trade the whole amount for whiskey, but as a rule he brought back tobacco, salt, meal and calico. There are hundreds of native families who live in exactly the same manner in Olancho. Sometimes the woman will be lucky enough to strike a rich pocket, that will yield a dollar or more a pan, but they never dream of washing it out at once and getting a stake. It simply means that they can secure their usual amount with less work."

ANOTHER AIRSHIP.

Inventor Declares It Will Remain in Air a Week at a Time.

The Swiss newspapers announce the forthcoming "launch" of a new airship over—not on—the Lake of Constance, says the London News. Its inventor is Count von Zeppelin, a retired German officer, who has for many years studied the question of steering balloons. He now claims to have solved the problem of the light motor. An aeroplane built by him is reported to have developed sufficient power to tow a boat on the River Inn at a speed of nine miles an hour. To minimize the risks of an unforeseen fall the count has selected the Lake of Constance as the scene of his decisive experiment. Its area of over 300 square miles will, he believes, be sufficient to enable him to execute all necessary evolutions. The vessel is "moored" at Friedrichshafen and is supported by sixty pontoons. There is a gas works in the vicinity. The inventor keeps the mechanism of his airship secret and has taken stringent precautions to warn off the curious. All that is known is that the vessel's proportions are immense—over 550 feet long and nearly fifty feet in diameter. It is cylindrical, with conical extremities, and is divided internally by strong partitions. The "hull" is of silk, stretched over a skeleton of aluminum. The power is supplied by two motors, placed beneath the cylinder, one at each end. The propelling principle is the ordinary screw, but there are three special devices for steering. Count von Zeppelin declares that his machine will be able to rise to a height of over 3,000 feet, lift a weight of nearly two tons, travel at a speed of ten yards a second, and remain in the air for a week at a time.

Meteors Prefer Morning.

An interesting and significant fact is that the average hourly number of meteors is only half as great in the evening as in the morning, and in the evening their velocity is lower, says Prof. C. A. Young in the New Lippincott for November. The reason is that at sunset we have before us the point in the heavens from which we are movin in our orbital journey around the sun, while in the morning we face the point toward which we are advancing; in the evening we are in the rear of the earth, at sunrise in front. This increase in the numbers and speed of the morning meteors is just what ought to happen if they are bodies moving indiscriminately in all directions under the sun's attraction, and with the velocity (about twenty-six miles a second) which a body would acquire in falling toward the sun from a distance very great as compared with the size of our planetary orbits.

Strange Story of a Watch.

A strange experience recently befell George Dietz, formerly a resident of Chester, Pa., but at the present time in the jewelry business in Honolulu. Mr. Dietz has recovered a watch which he lost over thirty years ago at Gettysburg. He was fighting for the north on that bloody battlefield when he dropped it. The watch was recently brought into the jeweler's shop by Harry Ellis of the Kansas volunteers. The soldier, who was bound to Manila, wanted to sell it. On being asked where he got it he said his father, who had found it on the battlefield of Gettysburg, had given it to him. The jeweler opened it and saw his name scratched on it. He lost no time in making a trade with the soldier.

PET SUPERSTITIONS.

Some That Influence All Sorts of People.

Dr. Samuel Johnson would never enter a room left foot foremost; the brave Marshal Saxe screamed in terror at the sight of a cat; Peter the Great was not equal to crossing a bridge when he came to it, unless to do so was absolutely necessary; Byron shared with less famous people than he the dislike to having the salt at table spilled between him and his neighbor. A sneeze is with half the nations of the world nothing to be sneezed at. To exclaim "God bless you!" when any one sneezes in your presence is a relic of what what the Roman did before us, and before him the Greek. Mohammed gives directions of the same kind to his followers, and the Hindu of today utters his pious ejaculation after the sneeze by way of prayer or good wish on behalf of the victim. Many people will avoid going under a ladder if they can get around it. The belief that if you put on your stocking the wrong side out it is lucky is very general, or was until the schoolmaster returned from abroad, and I myself remember an old woman who was convinced that turning her stocking inside out saved her from being lost when the fairies, one pitch-dark night, had misled her on a trackless English moor. What is to take the place of a lucky horseshoe when we all ride in automobiles? There is no room for the imagination in them. Some new mascot will have to be discovered. Charms of one kind or another are carried by people that have a pious contempt for heathen superstitions; a small potato, for example, to avert rheumatism, or a chestnut. The late journalist, George Augustus Sala, never traveled without carrying with him, as a lucky card, an ace of spades. Somehow it failed to save him from his creditors. But creditors are notoriously deficient in imagination. If Shylock had remembered this when he drew up his bond, "The Merchant of Venice" would never have been written.—Rochester Post-Express.

HANGED FOR BURNING COAL.

Strange Law Which Was in Force in England in 1500.

There will be an interesting function in London shortly, when the coal exchange celebrates its jubilee. The occasion is one for recalling strange reminiscences: for as late as the fourteenth century a prohibition was issued against the burning of coal, with severe penalties decreed against any person who warmed his house by a coal fire. In the early days of Lord Mayor Whittington the burning of coal was considered so great a public nuisance that it was made a capital offense, and one man was actually hanged for indulging in a coal fire. As a matter of fact, this ordinance was never repealed, but in "Dick Whittington's" third mayoralty it is evident there was a great trade in coal, and the suggestion has been made that coal was brought to London in boats known as the "cats," this was the real origin of the story of Dick Whittington and his cat. The coal exchange, however, is a modern institution. It is also one of the most important of London's marts. Under the shadow of its domed roof commercial transactions are daily carried through of greater value than in connection with any other mercantile building in the world. Unlike the corn exchange in Mark lane, it is not a private concern, but is a city market conducted on the same principles as the other markets opened by the city corporation. Opened with much ceremony in October, 1849, by the prince consort, the present building is just about to celebrate its jubilee. But the market itself is older than the building. Up to 1807 it was in the hands of private individuals, but in that year it was purchased by the corporation for £25,100.—London Times.

A Curious Accident.

A curious accident took place at Brookfield, Ind. A local freight train was backed into a siding to allow a fast freight train to pass. The switch was left open, however, and the fast freight, traveling at the rate of thirty miles an hour, dashed into it. The crews of both trains jumped. The impact of the collision was so severe as to drive the tender of the stationary train off its truck, and telescoping a cattle car, which was loaded with coal, it rested half on the top of the third car. On the fast freight a car loaded with hogs was telescoped by one loaded with shelled corn, and the animals not killed in the collision were smothered by the corn. It is said that the locomotives are so interlocked that dynamite will be required to separate them.

Bird Friends of a Boston Policeman.

From the Boston Evening Record: On a short street leading from Washington street every noon there is a little occurrence in which a policeman figures, and which attracts the attention of many passers-by. The officer comes there to ring in a duty call and then gets some peanuts from a near-by stand and begins to whistle. In a moment dozens of pigeons begin circling around him, and he shells the peanuts, holds out his hand, and the pigeons light on his arm and hand and eat as many peanuts as they can get. One brown one is particularly tame and greedy, and will eat a pint of them, the officer says. Many people come there every noon to watch the little show.

Weight of American Mails Unknown.

Strange as it seems, the United States government has not taken a complete accounting of the actual total weights of the mail matter carried by it for over twenty years.

QUEER FOSSIL.

Jaw of a Huge Unclassified Animal Found in New Mexico.

Santa Fe New Mexican: The fossil remains of a strange prehistoric animal were discovered recently at Postmaster Nusbaum's ranch, at Tesenque. Alphonso Dockweiler, who has charge of digging a ditch through a ridge on the ranch, picked up a piece of petrified bone the shape of a large tongue, but with a row of twelve teeth along what seemed to be the tip of the tongue. He dug a little further and found the remainder of what seemed to be the jaw of an animal that was part ichthyosaurus and part plesiosaurus, with some of the characteristics of the pterodactyl, perhaps. The jaw consisted of about twenty layers of bone in the shape of a tongue, and each layer was armed with a dozen teeth, which showed that the animal was herbivorous and not carnivorous. These twenty layers were evidently the upper jaw of the animal. Mr. Dockweiler expects to find the lower jaw and perhaps all of the remains of the strange animal. As much as he has found he will bring to this city and from here ship it to the Smithsonian Institution at Washington. Two layers of the j[illegible] brought to the city by J. G. S[illegible] and shown to friends, who [illegible] puzzled by their unusual shape. [illegible] well known that the surroundings of Santa Fe abound with submarine fossil remains which seem to prove that in long-gone-by ages the site of this city was covered by a sea. Only half a mile up the arroyo and canyon this branch off Palace avenue, near the old brewery, pretty petrified seashells are to be found. At many other places there are unmistakable signs of the erosion of the waves and footprints of gigantic prehistoric amphibians, who made their home both in the water and on the land in the days when the highest peaks of the Rocky mountain range were only islands in a vast ocean.

$20,000 PAID FOR A BIBLE.

Psalterium, Printed in Gutenberg's Shop, Worth Even More.

Fabulous sums are paid for copies of the earliest printed Bibles on account of their rarity. Yet it is known that many more were manufactured than have ever come to light, and every now and then we hear of another copy having been found in some garret or cellar amid the rubbish. The famous "Mazarin Bible" has been sold for more than $20,000, and this is called cheap, as it is one of the finest specimens of the printer's art ever produced, and, most interesting of all, was set up and published by Gutenberg in 1455, after three years of continuous labor. He printed only 100 copies, but eighty-five of these have never been found. It is called the Mazarin because the first copy to be discovered in modern times was in the library of Cardinal Mazarin. But there is another part of the Bible, called the "Psalterium," because it contains the Psalms only, which commands even a higher price, having been sold for $25,000, for but six copies are known to be in existence. It was printed by John Faust and Peter Schoeffer on parchment in Gutenberg's shop, and is the first printed book bearing the year and day of its publication on the title page. This inscription reads, "1457, on the eve of Ascension." Of course all of the earliest Bibles were printed in Latin. The first complete Latin Bible with a date appeared in 1462, and is valued at $7,000. After that time many editions of the Bible appeared in all languages—German, English, French and Greek—and in 1514-1517 was the first polyglot Bible, one in which the Bible appeared in various languages side by side. The most valuable Bibles all date from the fifteenth or sixteenth centuries. After that no special value is attached to them.

Will Develop Japanese Mines.

The Japanese government intends to introduce in the next session of the diet a law freeing foreigners from all restrictions in regard to the mining business in Japan. The existing law prohibits them from becoming shareholders or partners in any mining company. By the new law such provision will be entirely done away with. It is evident that the government is beginning to realize that foreign capital will not come into the country unless foreign ownership privileges are first conceded. Mining enterprises requiring especially large amounts of capital, such privileges will now probably be granted. And it is likely that they will ultimately be extended to cover foreign ownership of real estate and industrial shares. It is quite evident that the mining resources of the empire are in an undeveloped state, and that they are arousing a growing interest and attention.

An Ancient Coin.

One of the prized curios of the Philadelphia mint is a coin which is 2,000 years old, and which was coined at the ancient mint of that other Philadelphia of the far east mentioned in the Bible. It is still in good condition, and the inscription is perfectly legible. The design on the face of the coin bears a striking resemblance to the Goddess of Liberty of our own currency, and underneath is the one word "Demus," which means "the people." On the other side is the figure of Diana, with her bow arched, and the inscription, "Diana, Friend of the Philadelphians." When this coin was struck off Philadelphia was the most important city of Lydia.

THE SIRDAR'S CAMEL CORPS.

A Complete and Self-Contained Little Fighting Force.

The saddle was of wood throughout, with broad fans, the splay of which could be altered to suit a camel's back without much trouble by the native saddler attached to each company, says the Cornhill. The pad was removable—leather outside, soft felt inside, the stuffing being of hair, and, by a system of pockets, this hair stuffing could be removed and shifted at will, so as to alter the pressure and prevent it hardening and forming into lumps, the men being taught to constantly remove and pull the stuffing of their saddles. Each saddle was fitted with one large leather "kherg," or bag, containing six days' forage, and with two smaller ones containing the rider's food and spare clothing, besides which each man was provided with two water skins, to be filled according to requirements. Thus equipped, a seven days' desert trip could be undertaken, if there were wells containing sufficient to water the camels about every third day. The men were armed with a Martini rifle and bayonet, and carried 100 rounds of ammunition, ninety in bandolier and pouches, the remainder on their saddles, sewn in a roughly made saddle cloth, so as to distribute the weight equally. They were clothed in a brown woolen jersey, cord pantaloons and leather gaiters. The total weight carried when loaded up for a seven days' trip, with filled waterskins, would be a good 400 pounds, which, of course, reduced itself daily as forage and water were consumed. Thus we have a complete and self-contained fighting force, which in its own element, the desert, asks nothing from any one, which disappears and is swallowed up in the trackless waste, to reappear again, after an interval of six days, having accomplished its task.

They Talk by Whistling.

Gomera, one of the Canary islands, is a small island containing about 12,000 inhabitants. It is exceedingly rugged in formation, and the deep gorges and ravines which separate its mountain ranges are unbridged, and, therefore, it may be necessary to travel several miles in order to reach a point only a few hundred yards distant. Therefore, to obviate the necessity of doing this, the inhabitants have developed a whistling language, by means of which two men standing on opposite sides of the gorge can convey their meaning to each other. The teeth and fingers are used as well as the lips. Communications are made by notes in the whistle corresponding to syllables. The whistle, of course, carries much farther, and is much more distinct, than articulate speech could possibly be under the circumstances.—Stray Stories.

Afghan Justice.

Not many years ago a queen's messenger or some such official was robbed though not injured in any way, on his road to Cebul, Afghanistan, and the British government, of course, wrote to complain. No reply was received for months, but, at last, the Ameer wrote: "The matter you mention has been thoroughly investigated, and not only have the robbers of your messenger been put to death, but all their children, as well as their parents and grandparents. I hope this will give satisfaction to her majesty, Queen Victoria." The "satisfaction" of the queen may be imagined.—Baltimore News.

THE KING OF PALI.

Surrounded by His Followers, a Truly Medieval Picture Was Presented.

My first sight of the king of Pali was most imposing, says the Geographical Journal. Having heard of the approach of my party, he came out to meet us. We had stopped the night before at the small village of Jepiroh, beautifully situated on high ground and chiefly remarkable for the numbers of small green and red parrots that swarmed in the guinea cornfields all round it. It was the only place where I saw them in any quantities. We started off about 6:30, while the heavy dew was still sparkling on the grass, and soon met the head of the Pali contingent. First came 150 bowmen carrying nothing but their weapons and wearing only the smallest of loin cloths. At regular intervals among them were mounted officers. Next came a bodyguard of twenty picked men dressed in red gowns with white plaits down the back and armed with every imaginable kind of gun, the locks of which were incased in leather. After passing these men I came on a really beautiful sight. The king had drawn up under the trees on one side of the path, and some forty or fifty mounted followers had arranged themselves all round and behind him. They were dressed for the most part in white gowns, but generally with either a colored lining or another colored gown underneath. Voluminous white or blue turbans covered their heads, and some of them wore very handsome riding boots, though the majority were barefooted. The high-peaked saddles were covered with brightly colored saddle cloths and the horses' heads were almost hidden by enormous bridles, covered with tin ornaments, which kept up a perpetual jingling as they tossed their heads about to keep off the flies. On my approach they waved their spears over their heads with the butt to the front in token of friendship. This, with the king in the center wearing a cap of chain mail under his turban, and bowing with courtly grace made a truly medieval picture.

The Oceanic's Godmother.

Virgil's often quoted "Dux femina facti" will not let us forget that it was a woman who founded Carthage. Since Queen Dido's day women, perhaps less famous but no less worthy, have been leaders in enterprises as far-reaching as the creation of that ill-fated kingdom. A New York letter in the Boston Post relates a pretty story of one who founded a floating kingdom; at least, we are told, the idea of the largest ship in the world was born in a woman's brain. When Mr. William J. Pirrie, head of the ship-building firm of Harland & Wolff, at Belfast, proposed to run for parliament, his wife dissuaded him. "Don't go to parliament, Willie," she said. "You can build boats better than you can make speeches." "By Jove, you are right!" exclaimed her husband, and forthwith set about making plans for a marine monster that should surpass anything afloat. The result in due time was the great White Star liner Oceanic, 704 feet long, with engines of 28,000 horsepower, and room to accommodate 2,100 people. Mr. Pirrie's tribute to his fair and brilliant helpmeet is quoted as follows: "It is my wife who is responsible for our big boat. In fact, she knows as much about it as I do. She followed the plans as keenly as I did for the two and a half years which we took in designing the building of the Oceanic. It was she who suggested many clever things about the arrangement of the ship. She suggested all the decorations." Apparently Mrs. Pirrie's suggestions determined the great size of the steamer, rendering it almost independent of weather and sure of its time schedules, its merit as an economical coal consumer, its exceptional space for passengers, and its sacrificing of high speed to comfort.

Nervous Prostration Defined.

"Won't you tell me what is really nervous prostration?" queried a man of a woman. "I hear of this one of my acquaintances (chiefly feminine) and of that being victims of this fashionable disease, but I have not the slightest idea what the symptoms are." "I do not know how to describe it exactly," she answered. "It is when you order a poached egg for breakfast, for instance, and they bring you a fried one, and you burst into tears; or when you go into hysterics because the cook sends you word she wants a new saucepan; or when you consider your husband an unfeeling brute, because he tells you to cheer up and asks you to go to the theater. These, or something like them, are the premonitory symptoms, the next [illegible] is mild lunacy."

Strange Comrades for Men.

Dr. R. Hauthal, an Argentine savant, has put forward a startling theory concerning the remains of gigantic sloths, related to the great megatherium and the mylodon, recently found in Patagonia. In his opinion these animals, whose race is now extinct, were kept in a domesticated state by the prehistoric inhabitants of Patagonia. A cave at Ultima Esperanza, where many indications of the former presence of the huge beasts have been found, is regarded by Dr. Hauthal as having been used by the ancient Patagonians as a stable for the beasts.

To Stamp Out Consumption in Germany.

An organized attempt is being made to stamp out consumption in Germany by scientific methods of treatment. Already twenty sanatoria for patients have been opened, and others are to be provided. A congress is to be held in Berlin for the purpose of making the war against consumption a national movement throughout the German empire.

[illegible]

Fargo (N. [illegible]) [illegible] to the Minneapolis Times: A new phase of the prohibitory law was tested at Ellendale recently in the case of the State vs. Snow. The defendant was a salesman and drove over the southern part of the state. On one of his trips he gave a woman a drink of whisky out of a bottle he was carrying. There was no evidence to show that he gave the whisky with any intention, or hope, of its being an agent to assist him in his sales, but he was arrested and taken into court on the charge of treating, which is against the law. The jury was out for a long time and finally disagreed. It is the first case in the state against a man on the charge of treating. Many people are unaware of that provision in the law, and it has always been regarded as a dead letter.

VALUABLE BUILDINGS

Have Been Erected by Y. M. C. A.'s During the Past Year.

In these days of sharp competition when everything has to prove its right to existence and values are fixed on a cold business basis, it may be of interest to some to know what has been taking place in the building line during the last 12 months, and the outlook for the coming 12 in the Young Men's Christian association of this country. The amount and value of property by no means tell the success of the organization; they merely show the strength and permanency.

Most of the Herald's readers are familiar with the successful canvass for $50,000 at Grand Rapids, Mich., shortly after the international convention in that city in May last, largely the work of Secretary Van Vranken, and which left their $110,000 building free from debt. Other cities raising equal or larger amounts were Cincinnati, O., and Cambridge, Mass., whose building in 1897 cost $150,000. Those which cleared their property of debt under $50,000 were Rockford, Ill., Wilmington, Del., Butler, Pa., Montreal, Que., Keene, N. H., Seattle, Wash., Sharpsburg, Pa., Janesville, Wis., Tonawanda, N. Y., Yonkers, N. Y., Baraboo, Wis.

Among the cities which secured new buildings in 1899 may be mentioned Washington, D. C., where the property of the Columbia Athletic club, valued at $125,000, was purchased for $75,000. Subsequent improvements foot up a total cost of $102,000.

Memphis, Tenn., also purchased a club house for $22,500. Other cities coming into possession of club houses were Manchester, N. H., Dallas, Tex., West Side Department, Chicago, Hyde Park Department, Chicago.

Buildings were erected at Keokuk, Ia., Leavenworth, Kan., Newark, O., Salem, Mass., Bristol, R. I., Montclair, N. J., Passaic, N. J., Sacramento, Cal., Mobile, Ala., Kingston, N. Y., Waterloo, Ia., Evanston, Ill., Taunton, Mass., Warwick, N. Y., Oregon City, Ore.

Surprising as this record is, the present year bids fair to equal if not exceed it. Scranton, Pa., will build at a cost of $250,000, including lot; Brockton, Mass., $110,000; Springfield, O., $60,000; Jamestown, N. Y., $45,000; New Haven, Conn., $200,000; Macon, Ga., $12,000; Dayton, O., $250,000. Pittston, Pa., Springfield, Mo., Lancaster, Pa., Shamokin, Pa., Westfield, Mass., Kenosha, Wis., Chelsea, Mass., Colorado Springs, Col., Ansonia, Conn.

Such buildings as these as homes for the young men of the nation is an indication of the need and that the need is being met by the business community.

A SUNDAY SCHOOL CENSUS

The following paragraph from the Outlook of New York will interest a great many persons in Grand Forks and other persons in the northwest:

"The Philadelphia Sabbath School association proposes an interesting undertaking, namely, a complete census of Philadelphia's million and a quarter inhabitants, the entire census to be accomplished in a single day. The object of this census is to list all those in that city who attend church or Sunday school services. An advisory committee consists of one clergyman or some other official from each religious denomination. The Sabbath School association has divided Philadelphia into 18 districts and 137 sub districts. For each of these sub districts there will be a chairman, to each of whom a section will be given. These section workers will write the names and residences on cards, with such description as may be needed, and deliver the cards to the sub district chairman, who will make totals of the results, and in turn deliver the information to the district chairman. It is proposed to take the census on the 22nd of February. The pioneer of the endeavor is Mr. Hugh Cork, who has had charge of a similar census in Pittsburg. Mr. Cork says that out of the entire population of Pittsburg only 600 people refused to give the information asked. As results of that census many churches have been able, first, to bring back those who had lapsed from attendance, and, secondly, to gain others who had no particular church allegiance. The Pittsburg census revealed the fact that 25,000 persons had relinquished church attendance."

Thomas Edison used to have Nikola Tesla working for him in his studio near Paris. Tesla came to him one day asking for work, and Edison, who needed help, referred him to the foreman, named Fulton. The latter took the young foreigner on condition that he would work. This Tesla did. For three days and nights he never closed his eyes. At the end of the first fortnight he had not had 48 hours' sleep altogether, and Fulton, the foreman, made him take a rest. He also said to the young man that on account of the strain both had been under they would better have a good meal. Accordingly, the foreman and the student went to a well-known cafe in one of the boulevards and got one of the biggest and thickest steaks possible. It was enormous, and seemed to be overwhelming for two. Besides, the garnishings were liberal and there was enough good wine. Between them, however, they managed to make everything disappear, and then Fulton, turning to Tesla, asked him if there was anything else he would like. "You're out with me, you know, and whatever you want, just order it." Tesla looked vaguely around a minute, as if making up his mind, and then, hesitating, said: "Mr. Fulton, if you don't mind, I would like another steak."

MOODY.

The late evangelist Moody was a firm believer in newspaper advertising. He used to say: I don't believe any man need preach to empty pews if he will only use a little common sense. Advertise. Put a notice in the papers. Stick out a sign. Put out a bill of fare. No church can succeed with only undertakers' signs on it. Don't be afraid. Shock somebody. No matter; we've got to be shocked. Somebody says it isn't dignified. My friends, let dignity go to the winds. That isn't one of the fruits of the Spirit. I notice these reporters don't stop for dignity. When they want anything out of me, they don't hesitate to follow me right into my bedroom. Use the same enterprise in running your meetings that the papers do in their business.—Buffalo (N. Y.) Commercial.

DID NOT KNOW HIS BRAND.

And the Result Was That the Maverick Got in the Wrong Corral.

It all happened in a church not over a mile from the city post office, says the Washington Star. There was a young people's reception afoot, and there was a programme upon which appeared the name of a tenor soloist who is given to scrambled hair, sombreros and neckties that are vociferous. It was getting well along in the evening and the soloist had failed to appear. It so happened that nobody there knew him, and the lady who had engaged him had also failed to appear. Presently one of the men active in greeting the guests noticed a large, picturesque-appearing man enter the church parlor, and after looking carefully around him slide into a seat, beside which he deposited a big sombrero. It then appeared that his hair quite answered the description, also his tie, which was a screaming scarlet. The young manager approached the stranger, sure of his prey, and, bending over him, said, in his most dulcet manner: "The audience has been expressing regret at your nonappearance. Will you now favor us with one of your songs?"

The stranger looked up at the young man with rather a startled air and then blurted out: "Song! Mister, you've rounded up the wrong critter. I don't know G flat from gewhiz. I'm off the reservation, you see, and was wondering what kind of a game was on in here, and came in sociable-like. I—I reckon, mister, these folks ain't got my brand," and he fled into the outer darkness.

RED TAPE IN WASHINGTON.

So Strictly Observed the Carpenter Could Not Clean the Glass Door.

A correspondnt passing hurriedly into the room of the committee on rivers and harbors to see Representative Burton pulled the knob off the door, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

"How can I get that fixed, do you think?" asked Burton. "Shall I get the carpenter or the locksmith?"

"The locksmith, I suppose."

"No, sir. Were I to send for the locksmith he would tell me to consult the architect of the capitol. He has no authority to fix doorknobs. Doorknobs are permanent fixtures and are solely within the jurisdiction of the architect of the capitol."

"Do you see that bookcase there?" said Secretary Ellis. "I caused the carpenter to paste some cloth on the inside of the glass doors in order that the books might not show. He did the work, but when he had finished I noted that he had not cleaned the glass before he put the cloth on. The thing looked so disreputable that I asked him why he had not cleaned the glass.

"He told me that the glass was a permanent fixture and that he had no authority to touch it, but that the placing of the cloth upon it was a temporary matter and was entirely within the province of his labors. The whole thing's got to be done all over again."

OFFICIAL BATHTUBS.

From This Account We Learn How the Legislators Indulge in Their Ablutions.

Away down in the basement of the capitol, in the midst of the winding and mysterious passages of this subterranean section, are located the congressional bathrooms, where the statesmen cleanse their cuticles at the expense of Uncle Sam. There are about 15 tubs on the house side, and when congress is in session they are patronized at all hours of the day. The representatives who take their periodic tubbings in the capitol bathrooms are not bound by any particular hour or rule of bathing. They start in at any hour of the day (or night, if the house sits late), and are scrubbed and rubbed down by strong-armed attendants at government expense. The fact that the tubs are almost constantly occupied indicates the extent to which the privilege of a free bath is appreciated. In many of the hotels of the city patronized by congressmen a charge is made for the use of the bath, and the thrifty representative can get around this expense by making his ablutions at the capitol, says the Washington Star.

In both the senate and house wings of the capitol there are barber shops, where statesmen are shaved, and hair tonics, perfumes and soaps furnished by the government, so that if one has a mind to, the usual expenses of the barber shop can be avoided.

Color in Commerce.

The United States consul general in Frankfort says "that it is important to study the taste of people in the matter of color, as well as in regard to shape, in designing goods for a foreign market. Saxon makers of needles drove England out of Brazil by wrapping their goods in pink paper instead of black. Other Germans are catering to the fondness of Russians for red in their dress. France recently learned how distasteful green is to a Chinaman, but it cost a good deal of money to make the discovery."

Tobacco a Necessity.

One of the few things of which the Boers have an inadequate supply is tobacco. While spending millions for guns and ammunition, they neglected to provide themselves with an abundance of the soothing weed. Soldiers positively cannot get along without it. They can easier in many instances dispense with food. An editor in Pretoria, the capital of the Transvaal, appreciates the situation. He has made an appeal to the citizens who remain at home to deny themselves tobacco in order that the supply of the men at the front may not be restricted.

GETTING AN ANTIQUE CHEAP.

How a Collector Secured an Old Mahogany Table at Very Small Cost.

When a man becomes a crank on the subject of antiques he will go to any extreme to gain possession of a coveted treasure, says the Philadelphia Record. There is a physician up the northeast way who has the craze, and has it bad. He made a professional call on an old Irish woman the other day, and, as her ailment was not of sufficient severity to keep her from her household duties, he found her in the kitchen washing dishes. His eyes glistened as he saw the table upon which this homely operation was being performed. It was an old decrepit affair on three legs, but it was solid mahogany, with quaint carvings.

"That's a queer sort of a table to be washing dishes on," ventured the doctor.

"Sure, it is that," replied its owner; "an' I wouldn't be bothered wid it at all, at all, if I could afford a new one."

The doctor was all solicitude in a moment. "Why, that's too bad," he said. And then, as though seized with a sudden philanthropic inspiration, he added: "If you will allow me I'll buy you a new table, and I'll take the old one off your hands." Of course, the old woman was only too delighted. The doctor invested two dollars in a common kitchen table, in exchange for which he received the old mahogany one, which had been in the old woman's family for nearly a century.

AT THE PARIS EXPOSITION.

This Account Says the American Pavilion Is a Beautiful and Attractive Structure.

Our cocher has been ordered to turn into the Avenue de la Tour Marbourg, and suddenly I find that we have come out upon the Quai d'Orsay, and are at the entrance of the Pont des Invalides, says the New Lippincott. Here cabby is ordered to halt, and looks on in surprise as we descend into the ankle-deep dust and proceed by means of our open sesame, to the place where four American flags at the corners of a large square indicate the inclosure chosen by our commissioner general for the American pavilion.

Here, on the rive gauche, in company with others of the Pavillons des Etrangeres, will stand the American pavilion, a beautiful and attractive structure, whose broad steps lead down to the water. Here Americans may land, and at once receive that welcome and attention which the visitor soon discovers is second nature to the commissioner general and his staff; and here, more than anywhere else in Paris, will he find himself thoroughly at home.

It is to our commissioner general and his untiring industry that we are indebted for the great amount of space which is to contain the great American exhibit, and even my gloomy guide is tempted to break into a triumphant smile at this new proof of American skill and energy.

WAS DOING SO AND SO.

Quick Retort of a Level-Headed Youngster to a Rather Pertinent Question.

Frank is a boy of less than five years, sturdy, round-headed and thick in the calves. He is always restless and ever hungry. For one so young he commands an amount of language, correctly pronounced, that is remarkable. He is a busy boy, with many queer schemes running through his head. But he shines when playing a knife and fork, for here is he truly great, says the Chicago Chronicle.

It was at a family reunion that he was asked and replied to a question of a personal nature. His retort silenced his inquisitive and would-be jocular uncle, while the remainder of the family—Frank excepted—roared with laughter. The party was too big to have all seated at the extension table, so the children—four in number—were placed at a smaller table, where they were able to do as much damage as could have happened had they been with their elders.

Frank was served badly, for he has a fine appetite, and is not bothered with bashfulness. He bore down on a drumstick with vigor and filled his fat face with the meat. He was earnest in endeavor and suspended all conversation. One of his uncles glanced at the boy as he munched, and said:

"What are you doing, Frank?"

The boy was employed on a large mouthful at the time, and, like a skillful general, he attended to the matter in mouth first. He carefully masticated the cud, swallowed with an air of satisfaction and then turning his head over his left shoulder replied as follows:

"Oh, I'm doing so and so."

He immediately resumed operations on the drumstick.

Papa Liked Rag Time.

The Boston Transcript tells a story of a man who had a class of boys in natural history. One of the subjects which he took up was butterflies and moths, and he told the children a good deal about the chrysalides and cocoons. After he had got the boys well instructed he showed one of the smallest of them one of the cocoons, and asked: "What butterfly is this the cocoon of?" Then the little boy looked up and said, slowly and respectfully: "My papa says that all cocoons look alike to him!"

The Holy City.

Jerusalem is now holding but a shadow of the magnificent city of ancient times. It is about three miles in circumference and is situated on a rocky mountain.

Asparagus is so plentiful on the Russian steppes that the cattle eat it like grass. The seeds are sometimes dried and used as a substitute for coffee.

PART OF WRECKED SHIP.

How a Firm of English Shipbuilders Are Utilizing Half of a Stranded Vessel.

Probably the most remarkable achievement in the line of wrecking and rebuilding to be found in maritime history is represented by the reconstructed steamer Milwaukee, which was turned out in the summer of 1899 at the yard of C. S. Swan & Hunter at Wallsend-on-Tyne, England, says the Engineering Magazine.

The Milwaukee, a vessel of 463 feet length and 56-foot beam, went ashore near Aberdeen in September, 1898, a huge rock penetrating the hold for a length of 30 feet and to a height of eight feet above the tank top. When the salvage operators saw that it would be impossible to save the entire vessel it was decided to blow her in two with dynamite. This was done successfully and 180 feet of the fore end was left on the rocks, while the after-end was towed to a dry dock.

The saved portion of the vessel depended for flotation until placed in dry dock upon a transverse water-tight bulkhead at the forward end of the boiler space. It was towed to the Tyne and moored in the river until a new bow was built, launched and made ready for connection with it. So well was this done that a person ignorant of the facts would never know that he was looking at the original bow, while even those persons who knew the circumstances of the case were unable to point out the point where the junction of the new and old portions was made.

FROST SPOILED THE SPORT.

Sad Misfortune That Befell a Party of Georgia Chicken Fighters on a Stranded Steamboat.

Forty dejected and homesick gamblers returned to Knoxville the other day, says the Savannah News. On Christmas day, with 100 gamecocks, they left on a steamboat for an isolated resort down the river, where they expected to have a great cocking main and return to the city the next morning. The steamer carried no lifeboats. Before the destination was reached the steamer went on a sandbar and stuck fast "ten miles from nowhere." The weather was very cold and ice formed about the craft. The sports, determined to make the best they could of the situation, improvised a pit on the deck and held a few fights. As the hours went by and the night grew older and the ice in the river thicker, there came no hope of getting the boat off or of being rescued. Then someone became hungry, and it was ascertained that the sandwiches had given out. There was nothing to eat on board! For some hours longer the sports put on a brave front, but finally hunger got the best of them and they put their gamecocks—valued at five to one hundred dollars each—to slaughter. For two days and two nights they hung up on the sandbar, eating chicken that fairly tasted of money.

ARMY RULES ENDANGER LIFE.

Standing Up Under Fire Not the Only Absurd Regulation in the British Army.

The "unwritten law" in the British army which forbids officers from seeking shelter when under fire is not the most absurd regulation of the service. There are other "unwritten laws" which are just as Quixotic, and which lead to just as great mortality among the men who are most valuable to the service. One of them is illustrated by a little known circumstance with regard to the famous "charge of the light brigade" at Balaklava.

It is a rule, no less stringent because inofficial, in the British cavalry that when riding to attack only a certain rate of progress is permissible. The regular formation must be kept up, even though greater speed would minimize the chances of loss of life. When the Seventeenth and Thirteenth hussars were nearing the Russian artillery at Balaklava in face of a fire which caused men to fall every moment Capt. White, who was in the second line, spurred his horse with the idea of reaching the enemy as quickly as possible. This brought him to a level with Lord Cardigan, who was in the first line. Lord Cardigan, although he believed that certain destruction awaited the whole brigade, laid his sword across Capt. White's breast, peremptorily forbidding him to ride any faster than the others. White apologized and obeyed, checking his horse at once. Had the hussars been allowed to ride at full speed it is probable that the casualties among them in the course of the charge would have been decreased by 50 per cent.

Birds and Beasts at War.

You would hardly believe that moles, clumsy and almost blind, become perfect demons when they quarrel. No one knows what they quarrel about, but if they once start fighting one has to die. They will keep on in the presence of any number of spectators, hanging on to one another like bulldogs and burying their enormously strong jaws and teeth in one another's flesh. Hedgehogs, another type of the quiet, inoffensive-looking animal, not only fight, but always to the death, and when one is killed the other generally devours him. Hares, on the other hand, are proverbially the most timid of creatures, yet they can fight. A fight between two hares is a ludicrous sight, as they skip and jump over one another. But a blow from the hind legs of a hare is no joke to his opponent. Among birds robins are the most pugnacious. More than one case could be quoted of two robins so frantically set on killing one another as to have allowed themselves to be picked up in the hands of a looker-on and there have laid with beak and claws deeply buried in one another's plumage.

A QUEER CORK SAFE.

Dupes Were Unable to Find the Place Where They Were Bunkoed.

"Did you ever hear of a cork safe?" asked a drummer who represents the latest thing in chilled-steel and burglar-baffling time locks, according to the New Orleans Times-Democrat. "As far as I am aware," he continued, when everybody chorused a negative, "only one of them was ever built. It was made by an ingenious Dutch mechanic for a onetime famous confidence man named Dr. Baggs, who operated in Denver, Salt Lake and 'Frisco. The safe was a folding affair, made of paper on a backing of sheet cork and when it was opened up was six feet high, and looked exactly like the real thing. As it was always placed in a corner, it had only two sides, but every visible detail was complete—combination knob, hinges, lettering, bolt-heads and all. When folded it could be carried in an ordinary dress suit case. Baggs used the thing in a fake lottery office which was of itself a marvel of trick furnishing.

"When the victim entered the place it looked like an ordinary business establishment, with desks, railing, maps on the walls, safe in the corner, and several clerks at work on books. The instant he left a roll-top desk was opened up into a bed. The railing was folded together and slipped into a closet, a table was turned into a wash stand, a cabinet turned into a bureau, the safe was put away in its case, the curtains were pulled down and the room was to all appearances a simple sleeping apartment. By that means the poor dupe was never able to find the place where he had been bunkoed. I saw Baggs' old cork safe when I was last in San Francisco. It is now owned by a cigar dealer, who bought it as a curio, and while it is pretty badly battered, one can still see plainly that it was a wonderful piece of mechanical work."

THE JOLLY HARBOR SEALS.

One of Them Up on the Platform of Their Pool, Watching the The Red Fir.

"What's he watching the clock for?" a visitor at the aquarium asked of an attendant, referring to the smallest of the three harbor seals there, the one with the blackest coat. It was up on the platform at the end of the pool, with its eyes apparently fixed on the clock that is secured to the front of the railing round the gallery. The hour was about two minutes of four o'clock, says the New York Sun.

"He's waiting for the whistle to blow," was the reply, and it certainly did seem as though the little black seal was watching for something.

The seals all know well the sound of the four-o'clock whistle, for that means their feeding time has come. The whistle is the signal of the closing hour of the aquarium, and the seals are fed immediately.

As the people set their faces toward the door the seals dash and slash and prance about in their pool, and jump up half or three-quarters of their length out of the water and look over the railing, watching and waiting for the man with the food. As he walks along the pool toward the platform at the end the seals rush on the platform to meet him.

It may be that the little black fellow just happened to be up there at that hour, and that it was looking at the clock just by chance, and that it couldn't tell the time by it at all; but the seals all know sure enough the four-o'clock whistle.

A KNOTTY CASE.

In Which It Is Shown That Cows Are Valued More Than a Mere Human Body in Africa.

A Uganda woman had married three husbands at different times, and had had a son by one of them—the second, says a writer in Blackwood. The father unfortunately died, and the other two quarreled about the possession of the son, who meanwhile lived with his mother. As soon as he was old enough to take law into his own hands the boy elected to live with the first husband, and left his mother to do so; thereupon the third husband raided the first, carrying off ten head of cattle, and, as if to still further complicate the case, one of the cows calved on the road. It now fell to my lot to decide with whom the boy was to live, and what was to become of the cattle.

So much evidence was produced that I became utterly confused, especially when the mother crawled in on hands and knees to give evidence as to parentage, in which, by the way, she was flatly contradicted by her offspring. I finally decided that the boy was to live with the first husband, and that half of the cows were to be returned to him, the remaining half, with the calf, being kept by No. 3. At this decision No. 1 was delighted, but I could never make out why, as five cows, even without a calf, are usually valued far above any mere human body in Africa.

Bursts Into More Pieces.

The ordinary shell which was manufactured 30 years ago only broke into from 20 to 25 pieces when it burst. At the present time it bursts into 240, while a shrapnel shell, which only used to scatter 37 missiles, now scatters 340. A present-day bomb, when charged with peroxylene, breaks up into 1,200 pieces, and it is estimated that it would effectively kill anyone standing within 220 yards of the explosion.

Jackies Fond of Ball.

Whenever enough men from an American man-of-war can get shore leave, no matter in what foreign port they may be lying, they are almost certain to start a ball game. In the English navy cricket is even played on board ship.

KING POTT OF AFRICA.

A Boer Leader Who Occupies an Exalted Position in the Transvaal.

The town of Lourenco Marques for some time past has been chosen as the head center of the Transvaal secret service. The spies and informers of that notorious gang, says the Cape Times, come and go with all the liberty, swagger and self-assurance, as if they were in the suburbs of Pretoria. Delagoa bay is a so-called neutral port, with a daily train and postal service direct to Pretoria and Johannesburg. There is also a telegraph service, which apparently is at the command of Mr. Pott, the Transvaal consul general and consul for the Netherlands and Free State. It has been said that the Transvaal consul general has a secret service wire directly connecting Lourenco Marques with Komati Poort, and it is well known in Delagoa Bay that Mr. Pott is possessed of the most reliable information of Boer "successes" many hours earlier than any man in Africa. This is extremely detrimental to British interests in South Africa. Mr. Pott is the direst intermediary between Dr. Leyds at The Hague and the Boer-cum-Hollander regime in Pretoria. This worthy Hollander has a perfect knowledge of English, Portuguese, French and German. He is comptroller of Transvaal customs and railway, director of the Transvaal nationad bank and head of the Dutch East African company. By virtue of his long residence in Delagoa Bay, Mr. Pott is a persona grata in all Portuguese official circles. Some two years back the Portuguese newspaper, O Futuro, published in Lourenco Marques, dedicated a special article to Mr. Pott, in which he was eulogized as "King Pott of Africa."

SAVED TWO TRAINS.

The Heroic Deed of a Modest Watchman on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

It does not take heroics to make a a hero; it only takes a man bent on doing his duty in the face of odds. Such a man is among the employes of the Canadian Pacific railway in British Columbia. He is a watchman, and he puts duty first and life second. The Michigan Christian Advocate tells the story of his devotion:

Not long ago a bridge on his section of road caught fire and tumbled into the raging mountain river. It was midnight, and the watchman was alone in the mountains. Coming toward that yawning gap was the limited express from the east, while from the west an excursion train containing 400 American journalists also drew near.

The excursion train was due first, and it was coming from the side opposite that on which the watchman stood.

The man did not hesitate. He plunged into the swollen stream, reached the other shore, ran to the flag station and signaled the excursion train. Then he disappeared in the darkness.

Back to the river he ran without a moment's pause, cast himself in and crossed again. Another rapid run to the flag station on that side, and the exhausted watchman, ready to sink with fatigue, stood by the Pacific flyer that had been brought to a stop at the flag station east of the bridge. He had saved two trains, and perhaps a thousand lives.

His own comment on the occurrence was that he had done his duty.

The Voracious Shark Is Well Fitted by Nature for His Rapacious Mission.

No doubt the shark's mouth is placed so much beneath the projecting muzzle, under which also the nostrils lie, that it may serve its proper purpose in the best way. In all records of the habits of the fish, says the Cincinnati Enquirer, we are told that it can and does bite out large chunks of flesh from the dead bodies of whales and even from living victims of its attack; and it is easily seen that if its mouth was like that of other fishes the necessary average would be lacking. A further reason seems to be that the shark by this peculiar position of its mouth is compelled to turn upon its back to strike and is thus able to deliver its onset from below with more deadly effect. This formidable strength of jaw is backed up by a most terrible array of teeth, of which in some species there are as many as six rows all round. Each tooth is saw-edged and pointed, and some of the largest are as much as two inches in breadth at their base. These lie flat against the jaws and can be raised by separate muscles at will, so that, as the shark darts upon its prey, they sping on end, as a cat's claws are stuck out from its paws. This arrangement will not allow anything once bolted to return, so that a shark's mouth is a veritable death trap.

Crime Upon Crime.

In sentencing a prisoner to be hanged for the murder of a soldier Lord Eskgrove dilated upon the crime as follows: "And not only did you murder him, whereby he was bereaved of his life, but you did thrust, or push, or pierce, or project, or propel the lethal weapon through the bellyband of his regimental breeches, which were his majesty's!"

Tomb of the Czars.

It is not generally known that the remains of all the czars of Russia since Peter the Great lie in a memorial chapel built on one of the islands of the Neva. All the cenotaphs are exactly alike, each being a block of white marble, without any decoration whatever.
